THE LONDON MONEY MARKET.

The Royal Mail steamship Asia, Capt. LOTT, which sailed from Liverpool at about 2 o'clock P. M on the 25th of June, arrived here at an early hour yesterday morning.

The steamship Great Britain was advertised to leave Liverpool on the 30th June, and the Cunard steamer Etna on the 2d July, both for New-York direct.

It was discovered when the steamer City of Baltimore, (which left Liverpool for New-York on the 22d ult.) arrived at Queenstown that one of the three blades of her propeller was broken, and it was accordingly resolved that she should return to Liverpool for the necessary repairs. The steamship Vigo, of the same line, was dispatched to Queenstown on the 24th ult, to take the Baltimore's passengers on to New-York, and it was supposed she would leave Queenstown on the 25th. The City of Baltimore returned to Liverpool on the 24th, and would be fitted with a new screw in the course of two or three days.

THE WAR IN ITALY.

The following dispatches indicate the course of events at the seat of war:

TURIN, June 22—(Official Bulletin.)—Yesterday the Emperor and King quitted Brescia for the camp amid the vivas and acclamations of the populace.

The allied armies have occupied Lonato, Castiglione and Montechiaro.

BERNE, June 22.—The Austrian troops are constructing a telegraph line between Gotzen and Landeck. The Austrian troops of the Italian regiments are repassing through the Tyrol for Germany. Three thousand of them have arrived at Mals, and 3,000 more are to follow. The Austrians continue to construct block houses, redoubts and fortifications at Nanders.

TURIN, June 23.—The main body of the Austrian army is on the left bank of the Mincio.

The Piedmontese had advanced towards Peschiera, and, after a vigorous encounter, repulsed the outposts of the enemy, who lost several killed.

The entire French force has passed the Chiese at Montechiaro, pushed a reconnaissance as far as Golto, and surprised the great Austrian Guard, (grande garde Autrichienne,) which lost nine prisoners and some killed.

VERONA, June 23.—The headquarters of the Emperor of Austria has been removed to Valleido. The health of the troops is excellent. French war steamers are expected.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times of 21st, states that the pickets of the two armies in Italy were within sight of each other, and that scarcely a day passed without slight skirmishes. The Emperor of Austria is believed to have 280,000 men under his command on the line of the Mincio.

BERNE, June 24.—Dispatches from Milan confirm the news that 5,000 French troops have been dispatched towards the Valtelline at Bruno. 300 Austrians and a company of volunteers, consisting of students of Moran, in the Tyrol, are marching to occupy the passage of Stelvio.

The Archduke, Governor of the Tyrol, had arrived at Nanders to overlook the enrollment of 24,000 men in the Tyrol and Voralberg. The Tyrolese raise difficulties about entering military service.

LONATO, June 23—(Official.)—This morning, the Emperor NAPOLEON, accompanied by the King, traversed the environs of the town and pushed a reconnoissance as far as Desenzano on the borders of the Lake.

A dispatch from Turin states that a portion of the Piedmontese fleet, consisting of six war steamers, was to sail immediately on active service.

The Austrian Government formally declares that the cruelties attributed to General D'URBAN in the diplomatic circular of Count CAVOUR are entirely devoid of foundation. Details are promised shortly.

The Austrian Correspondence announces that the French Government has strongly disapproved of the conduct of the Admiral of the French fleet before Venice in capturing some barges belonging to fishermen.

A Venice letter of the 15th states that the disturbances there were put down without loss of life. A number of arrests were, however, made.

A correspondent of the London Times, in the allied camp, describes some remarkable feats accomplished by GARIBALDI in surprising the Austrians—making forced marches of 45 miles within 24 hours, and raising the country in favor of national independence

A Vienna dispatch asserts that Prince ESTERHAZY's visit to London is unaccompanied by any official mission whatever.

According to letters from Malta a fleet of eight British steam liners was ready for departure, and the Adriatic Sea was spoken of as the destination.

The Paris Moniteur contains a note explaining the nature of the dictatorship offered by the whole of Italy to the King of Sardinia. It says: "Persons conclude wrongly that Piedmont, without consulting the wishes of the different people or the great Powers, reckons on uniting the whole of Italy in one single State. Such conjectures have no foundation. The different people, whether delivered or abandoned, desire to make common cause against Austria. With this intention they have placed themselves under the protection of the King, but the dictatorship is purely a temporary Power, which, whilst uniting the common forces in the same hands, in no way presages combination for the future."

It was reported at Paris that the Russian Ambassador at Turin had remonstrated against the organization of a Hungarian Legion, and that the Prussian Government had declared that it will assist in putting down an insurrection in Hungary.

Gen. GIULAI, ex-Commander-in-Chief of the Austrian army in Italy, had retired to his estate.

THE LATEST.

Great Battle—Victory of the Allies.

PARIS, Saturday Morning, June 25.

The Emperor has telegraphed the following to the Empress:

CARIGNANA, Friday Evening.

Great battle—great victory. The whole Austrian army formed the line of battle, which extended five leagues in length. We have taken all their positions and captured many cannon, flags and prisoners.

The battle lasted from 4 o'clock in the morning till 8 o'clock in the evening.

THE ATTITUDE OF PRUSSIA.

Prussia was assuming a decidedly hostile attitude, and her proceedings attracted much attention.

A dispatch to the London Daily News, dated Berlin, June 23, says:

"Prussia has demanded permission to march 31 000 troops through Hanover to the Rhine between the 1st and 5th of July."

The Nord publishes the following, dated Berlin, June 21:

"At a Military Conference held yesterday it was resolved that the Guards should remain at Berlin and Potsdam, and six regiments of cavalry and infantry should be cantoned in the Province of Brandenburg.

Three corps d'armée will take up positions between the Lower and the Central Rhine. Two other corps d'armée will be stationed upon the Upper Rhine and the River Maine. One of these corps will proceed to its destination through Silesia, Saxony and Bavaria. The departure of troops will take place about the 1st of July."

It is denied that any treaty had been concluded between Austria and Prussia with reference to the war.

The basis of the mediation which it is said Prussia will propose to the belligerent Powers is, that Lombardy shall become an independent State, Venetia be governed by an Austrian Archduke, and an energetic application shall be made to France and Austria to bring about an armistice.

The Independance Belge gives another version of the propositions which Prussia is said to have made for the establishment of peace, but does not guarantee their authenticity. According to this latter information, Prussia proposes that Lombardy be annexed to Piedmont; Parma, Modena and Tuscany to be restored to their legitimate Sovereigns; the authority of the Pope to be reëstablished in the Legations; Venice to become independent; and the four famous fortresses of the Mincio to be annexed to the Germanic Confederation, so preventing an aggressive return to Lombardy on the part of Austria, and protecting Venice from the aggrandizing projects of Piedmont.

The Journal des Debats asserts that the Bavarian Government has refused to allow Prussian troops to pass through its territory until the Prussian Cabinet shall have answered a series of questions as to the meaning and purpose of the resolutions.

The official Prussian Gazette, in a leading article, says:

"The Franco-Sardinian army is moving near the frontiers of Germany. The Prussian Government has repeatedly declared that it regards the security of Germany as intrusted to its care. The Italian conflict is assuming ever-increasing dimensions. England and Russia are arming on the greatest scale. The Prussian Government would be faithless to its duty and to the sense of the nation if she should refuse to act commensurately with that spirit by which Prussia has become great. Prussia is free from every engagement. She obeys only these obligations which spring from the innermost nature of her State interests. It will soon be seen whether Prussia's initiative will be supported by the necessary impress of the German States. Prussia's policy stands firm, and whoever lays obstacles in its way may consider that he is rendering services to the enemies of the fatherland."

The London Post says, the mission of the Prussian Ambassador at Vienna to the head-quarters of the Emperor FRANCIS JOSEPH, is formally contradicted.

The Grand Duchess Dowager, mother of the Princess of Prussia and aunt of the Emperor ALEXANDER, is dead.

WAR NEWS FROM PARIS.

The Plans of Kossuth—Criticisms of the London Times—American Opinions of the War—The Movements of the Austrians—Their Excesses—The Energy of Napoleon—Diplomatic Notes—American Artists in Paris.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Thursday, June 23, 1859.

In my last letter I informed you that KOSSUTH was in this city, and that he was soon to depart for Genoa, where the inhabitants were to give him a public reception. It has now become a matter of complaint with the Times and other journals of London, systematically opposed to the Government of the Emperor NAPOLEON, that the Hungarian leader should have been furnished with a passport by the French authorities, who are aware, so says the Thunderer, of his revolutionary intentions, and in fact encourage them. Now this is entirely without foundation; the passport serving M. KOSSUTH has not been obtained by the connivance of the French Government, who have not delivered him any passport or document of any kind. It is on the part of the Times, which has devoted a leader to the subject, deprecating the effects of KOSSUTH's mission,—a premature fear and uneasiness too eagerly made a parade of. For years past many of the London journals have constantly prophesied the immediate downfall of the Emperor NAPOLEON and the dissolution of the Government. Years of prosperity and advancement for France but seem to render the wishes of the detractors of her present system of Government the more anxious that their predictions should be verified, and all subjects are seized upon with eagerness to make use of against the good faith or the integrity of the Emperor NAPOLEON and his administration. Thus that KOSSUTH should pass through France on his way to Hungary is a sure sign that the peace of all Europe is to be endangered, and we are assured by the journals to which I have referred, that France is giving aid and encouragement to revolution and anarchy. This statement is a false one. I can assure you that KOSSUTH, let his errand be what it may, has received neither a French passport nor French encouragement. That he should desire to restore liberty and self-government to Hungary is but natural under existing circumstances; and it is hard to see that Hungary's acquiring her independence will bring upon all Europe a war, the consequences of which are, so says the Times, "too dreadful to reflect upon." All this apprehension is but the result of the animosity felt against the man who has so successfully ruled the destinies of France for the last ten years; and when such journals predict misfortune and ruin for the country, one may safely say the wish is father to the thought. As a general thing, public opinion in the United States has been too much controlled by the English Press—and more especially by the London Times. At the present time one finds in almost all the American journals coming to Europe, extracts from the leaders and correspondence of the London Times upon the war. Why should only one side of the question be afforded to the American public. These extracts I speak of are all unfavorable to LOUIS NAPOLEON; and now that time has shown the fallacy of these prejudiced leaders and letters, one is astonished in reading many of the American journals to find only such reproduced. The Austrian Headquarters Correspondent of the London Times has now got to be a by-word in Europe for all that is stupidly prejudiced and ignorant. His prophecies have all so ridiculously failed, that to continue publishing his letters is an insult to public opinion in England. However, I do not doubt that long ere this he is judged in the United States also. But is it not time that Americans be enabled to judge of European matters more fairly than by getting only one side of the question, and it a most prejudiced one? That any American journal should even seem to favor Austria, is a fact that fills the French public with an indignant astonishment. All the world must know what has been the course of Austria in her Italian provinces, and that she should find a defender or well-wisher in any American journal, proves that its editors are either ignoran or prejudiced, and that in the latter case they write against their convictions. By this time you will have heard of some of the barbarous actions of the Austrians in Piedmont, for surely other correspondents than the one from Austrian Headquarters will have had their letters reproduced in the United States.

Truth is powerful and must prevail, even again prejudice; and by this time the American public know that the French and Sardinian armies have marched from victory to victory, and that the Austrians, after making a hundred shows of defending the passages of the several rivers they have abandoned, have retreated until they can do so no longer. They are now in the centre of the celebrated rectangle defended by Peschiera, Verona, Mantua and Legnago, and can no longer retreat unless they leave the country entirely. The Emperor FRANCIS JOSEPH is at the head of his second army, but his presence does not seem to inspire his troops with any unusual degree of courage, as they have kept up their retreat until unable to go further. The French and Sardinian forces are in front of them, and, even as I write, the great battle, so long expected, may have been fought. One thing is certain, when it does take place the Austrians will be again most thoroughly beaten; for they will be mowed down by the batteries of rifled cannon which have just reached the Emperor NAPOLEON's head quarters. These cannon carry a sixty-pound shot the incredible distance of seven thousand yards, and the French troops will only attack the Austrians after they have them thrown into disorder by the heavy fire of these murderous engines. You will notice that, by abandoning Lonato, Castiglione and Montechiaro, the Austrians leave the passage of the Mincio free to the allied armies. Thus, after spending months in fortifying their positions all along the route of defence, they have abandoned the several strong places they counted so much upon, without even a struggle. The friends of Austria will see in all this deep strategy; but I have been upon the ground—have seen the immense fortifications—and I assure you that, when an army as numerous as the Austrian army abandons such positions at the approach of the enemy, it is from no strategical reasons, but simply because, having been beaten, the army has become demoralized and will not stand the shock of their pursuers. I do not doubt that the young Austrian Emperor intended to trust to the chances of a battle at each place he made a stop at, but the condition of his army forced him to give up the idea of defending the passage of the two rivers they retreated from, while their present retreat from the banks of the Mincio but proceeds from the same reason—he certainty that his officers have that the troops will not stand the attack of the Allies. I know, from having conversed with Austrian officers who were taken prisoners, that the men dread the vengeance of the Italian volunteers. The Austrian officers to force their soldiers to fight well, and especially not to desert from the ranks, told them that the French and Sardinians always killed their prisoners, and that as for the Italian volunteers they would assassinate all the Austrians they could get near to. The effect of these announcements has been to terrify the Austrian soldiers, who have no personal motive for fighting, and the consequence is they are demoralized and only anxious to get out of the country. They fight well as long as they are behind walls or even in rank, but once they see the French about to charge with the bayonet, they wait no longer and seek in a hasty retreat to escape the fate their officers have predicted for them. The following extract from a letter from Brescia will show that the Austrians are still keeping up their system of violence and depredation. You have, I suppose, received Count CAVOUR's circular relating to the murder of the Cignoli family, by order of Gen. URBAN. The extract relates a fresh exploit of the same gallant officer, renowned as the most persevering woman-whipper in the Austrian service. It says:

"Being desirous of continuing the traditions of his predecessors, he immediately, on his arrival, summoned to his presence the heads of the municipality. When they arrived, he ordered them in a peremptory manner to deliver to his army, within the delay of seven minutes, 100 oxen, 100 sacks of oats, 100 casks of wine, and 12 000 swanzigs. The delegates remonstrated, saying that the village was poor and that the time allowed was too short. The only answer made by the General was to draw out his watch, and, pointing to the hour, to say, 'The delay I allow has commenced, gentlemen.' The delegates looked at each other in alarm, and, after a minute's consideration, proposed a sum of 14 000 swanzigs in lieu of the other objects demanded. The General made no answer until the seven minutes had expired, when he said he would make no compromise, and arrested the delegates as hostages. On the following day, during the hasty retreat of the Austrians, the three prisoners effected their escape and returned to Calcio. These gentlemen, who are M. RICCI, advocate, and MM. RASELLI and BONETTI, landed proprietors, have been presented to the Emperor at the Villa Odofredi. The system of the Austrians is everywhere the same—blowing up bridges, cutting down trees, and burning houses. The stone bridge over the Oglio resisted the effect of the mine which they had prepared, and was merely shaken, and a few fragments were thrown into the river. A house at the extremity of it, on the banks of the river, was pillaged and burnt. Nothing remains but the four walls, which were loopholed. A barricade made of trees and earth was thrown up to defend the passage of the river, but abandoned."

While making extracts, I will inclose for you the following, which will give your readers some idea of how the Emperor NAPOLEON has things done. It is from the letter of a person present when the Emperor ordered a bridge to be thrown over the Ticino for the passage of the Imperial Guard:

"His Majesty sent for the captain of the pontoneers and asked him how long it would take to make a passage for the army. 'Two hours and a half, Sire,' was the reply. The Emperor took out his watch and said, 'Captain, I give you an hour and a quarter.' 'We will try and do it, Sire,' replied the captain. 'No,' said the Emperor, 'do not merely try—do it.' The first boats were soon moored, and the Emperor, in spite of the observations of his generals and aides-de-camp, jumped on this commencement of a bridge. The fastenings, not yet properly secured, were in great danger of being driven away by the current, and his Majesty was again cautioned, but he made no reply. As another boat was fastened to the first, the Emperor continued to advance, and as a workman hastened to pass him, he said in a loud tone, 'Make haste,' to increase his speed. In an hour and a quarter the bridge was secured on both banks, and the brigade of General CLERC rushed over it to meet the Austrians. The captain of the pontoneers was standing on the bank of the river wiping his forehead when the Emperor went up to him, and shaking him by the hand said, 'Captain, I thank you.'"

Since day before yesterday a large number of Austrian prisoners have arrived at Toulon and Marseilles making in all over five thousand. Several of the superior officers were allowed to choose Paris as their residence. A portion of the soldiers will be sent to Algeria.

M. DUQUER, the former Chancellor of the French Embassy at Vienna, left a day or two ago for that capital, which has given rise to the assertion that he was gone to negotiate an exchange of prisoners. This is an error. The object of M. DUQUER's visit to Vienna is the abiding the Spanish Ambassador, who is charged with the interests of the French subjects in Austria. M. DE POURTALES, the Prussian Minister at this Court, arrives here to-morrow with his family. This action on the part of the Minister would go to disprove any intention on the part of his Government of interfering in the Italian question, in favor of Austria, which course would render the stay of the Prussian Minister in Paris of short duration. It has been asserted by many of the English and Belgian journals that M. DE POURTALES was to visit the Emperor NAPOLEON at his headquarters, also the Emperor FRANCIS JOSEPH. I can assure you that at the present time there is no question of any such visit to be made by the Prussian Minister. I have it from good authority that the statement made by the Independance Belge, relative to a letter said to have been addressed by the Prince Regent of Prussia to the Emperor NAPOLEON, explaining the mobilization of the army, and asking the Emperor to trust to the good faith of Prussia, and not place an army of observation on the banks of the Rhine, is without foundation. At the present time the public cannot be too careful in according credence to rumors. So many of them without the least foundation are circulating that he who wishes to follow the course of events becomes bewildered.

Setting politics aside, allow me to speak of a matter which will, I hope, interest your readers. I refer to the success of American artists at the present exhibition in this city of the works of living artists. Over 8 000 tableaux were sent, and but 3 000 were accepted; among those conspicuous, are the works of P. F. ROTHERMEL and EDWARD H. MAY. Mr. ROTHERMEL had just arrived in Paris previous to the opening of the Exhibition, and was forced to ask for a brief delay to enable him to finish the most important work which he exhibits. It is called in the catalogue, "La Mort du Doge Foscari."—"The Death of the Doge Foscari." The coloring of the picture is something unusual in French exhibitions; its harmony and warmth are striking, and the whole ensemble of his works peculiar and original. French critics pronounce them, as well as those of Mr. MAY, an honor to American art. I will not go into any lengthened description of these pictures, merely wishing to state the fact of their triumphant success. Mr. ROTHERMEL is soon, as I am informed, to sail for the United States. He takes with him the works I refer to, and the public will have an opportunity of judging of their peculiar merit.

I must not neglect making special mention of the works of R. S. GREENOUGH, the American sculptor. Mr. GREENOUGH exhibits an equestrian statue of WASHINGTON, or rather a model for one, which has attracted the attention of French connoisseurs. Some time since the Artiste, the Paris art journal, contained a lengthy and most favorable critique of Mr. GREENOUGH's works. It is highly gratifying to Americans in Paris to find their country so well represented, and I call the special attention of your readers to the works of Messrs. MAY, ROTHERMEL and GREENOUGH.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MILAN, Saturday, June 18, 1859.

Things on the whole are rather dull here. Men on 'Change grumble at the irregularity with which the bulletins from Paris and London viâ Bellenzona arrive; the telegraph being everywhere reserved for the use of the State. Letters from Germany don't arrive at all, so business is limited to ben poca cosa. This does not prevent the continuous attention of rich and poor to the wounded, or the perpetual gatherings of volunteers at the divers offices. This morning an officer of the "Hunters of the Alps" has gone to Cremona to open the rolls for the inscriptions there. Numbers of volunteers inscribed for the Hunters of the Appenines were sent to Piacenza yesterday. The principal merchants of this city have opened a subscription for the purpose of presenting two florins (a dollar) to the soldiers of the allied armies as they come out of the hospitals. 9 000 florins were collected yesterday, and the lists are being carried from house to house. There exists also an ecclesiastical commission to collect money in aid of the poor families of the killed or wounded. The sums collected are deposited in the bank, and thence transferred to the Minister of War, to be distributed as the Commander-General shall see fit.

Great are the rejoicings here at the overthrow of the Derby Ministry, who were regarded as allie of Austria, and the prospect of Lord JOHN RUSSELL's being coming Foreign Secretary is hailed as an intervention of Providence in behalf of Italy. Extracts from his speech on the eve of the dissolution are published in every paper and read with avidity. May the hopes of the Italians in England not prove as heretofore a delusion and a snare.

The thoughts of all turn anxiously to the coming battle between the allied armies and Austria, on the result of which the fate of Italy seems to hang. This battle will probably take place between the Chiese and the Mincio Rivers. Even if the Austrians are defeated, they have still the four fortresses to retreat to, which must be wrested from them one by one, or in a regular siege.

As you are aware, Peschiera, Mantua, Verona and Legnago form the famous quadrilateral, inclosing a field which holds the secret of Austrian rule in Italy. These works of art are rendered still more formidable by natural combinations, i. e., by the mountains of the Tyrol, the Lake of Garda and by three rivers. The mountains of the Italian Tyrol penetrate into Italy in the form of a cone laid on its side, whose base touches the Alps, whose apex lies between Peschiera and Verona, forming a sort of citadel which places the Austrian army in communication with the four fortresses, guarded on the west by Lake Garda, and on the east by the Adige. From this citadel Austria can send out her forces at need, either into Venice or into Lombardy, without ever quitting her basis of operations. The Allies cannot attack the Tyrol without giving a casus belli to the German confederation, of which the Tyrol forms a part. The Mincio, which flows out of the Lake of Garda from north to south, empties itself into the Po, which, running from west to east, while it forms the natural limits of a war in Upper Italy, forms the southern bulwark of the four fortresses. The Mincio, from the Lake of Garda, where Peschiera is situated, runs down ten leagues, and there forms the marsh round Mantua. It is the shortest of the perpendicular streams which flow through Lombardy; shorter than the Ticino, the Adda, the Oglio, or the Chiese; hence, it can be more easily defended by the Austrians, especially if they are clever in impromptu fortifications. Little hills line the river on either side. In some parts it is fordable, but not in rainy seasons nor during the thawing of the snow. Some stone bridges are thrown across it. From Peschiera and Mantua the Austrians can always thunder down on any enemy who attempts to force a passage, and seriously molest his operations. Peschiera is situated on an island formed by the Mincio as it flows from the lake. Its fortifications consist of a pentagon, with bastions and half-moons. Two outposts defend it—the fort Salvi to the west, and Mandella to the east. Fort Salvi consists of two lunettes and an exterior line; also, Mandella, with some half-moons in front. The lunette on the right commands the approach from Brescia, the one to the left commands the approach from Cavalcaselli, which leads to Verona. The lunettes and the half-moon are joined by an exterior line of defence. Since 1848 the Austrians have extended this line in front of the island. Eight lunettes similar to those of Mandella stand on the summit of a slight declivity. They are bomb-proof, with artillery on the terraces, and protected by earth-works. It is true that if one of these lunettes are taken, the rest cannot long hold out. The Austrians have constructed these forts in the hopes of hindering the enemy from availing himself of the surrounding hills to open his first parallel about five hundred paces from Peschiera, as was possible previously. The Austrian ships on the Lake of Garda also afford them an opportunity of effecting sudden landings on the opposite side of the lake. In the swamp formed by the Mincio are two islands each eight hundred yards distant from the shore. On these are situated the fortifications of Mantua. Fine military roads, or dams, proceed thence, which are protected by four forts—Pietole, Pradella, the Citadel and San Giorgio—also by lunettes. To this position, and to these works of art, which render Mantua a first-class fortress, is added the extreme unhealthiness of the air, fatal to those who may attempt a blockade. The Austrians have besides the advantage of firing from the four forts, to which the besiegers cannot profit by the other corps on the opposite side of the swamp. If, therefore, the Allies are bent on blockading Mantua, they must employ almost the entire strength of their armies, unless they can succeed in constructing entrenchments before each of the enemy's fortresses.

But the line of defence regarded as the most important by Austria is the Adige; as the line which puts her army in direct communication with the Tyrol by the road which leads from Verona to Pusterlengo and Rivoli, and the Austrians have spent about thirty millions of francs in order to fortify Verona. A system of bastions winds all round the old wall, and around them, at the distance of 600 yards one from the other, forts bomb-proof have been erected. Verona presents the aspect of an entrenched camp two miles wide and three miles long. Protected by the Adige, a river not fordable in any part, and by the Po, which from Legnago runs parallel, the Austrian army seems not to fear any attack from Central Italy. Verona and Legnago, situated on either side the Adige facilitate the Austrian passage to and fro according to their offensive and defensive intentions. But in case the Allies should possess themselves of Venice in virtue of their fleet in the Adriatic, aided by insurrection, then even the line of the Adige might be surrounded, and Legnago and Verona be attacked in their most vulnerable points.

It is said that the attack of the Allies will be made simultaneously from Venice, as suggested above, at Peschiera by 50,000 Italians under VICTOR EMANUEL; at Legnago by the fifty corps of the French army, and also by 10,000 Tuscans, under Prince NAPOLEON; while the Emperor, with the bulk of the army, is said to meditate an open battle in the centre of the quadrilateral in order to join Prince NAPOLEON, pass the Adige at Legnago and effect a junction in the Venetian provinces with the Franco-Sardinian forces at Venice! Should all these plans succeed then Italy will indeed be liberated from the Austrians. Perhaps this sketch, suggesting some few of the obstacles, may explain to you how, despite the recent triumphs, each Italian heart beats with anxiety, and all who are able so to do press in to offer their mite of service to the common cause.

The enrolment of volunteers at the Gymnasium of Sant Allesandro, continues without intermission. The extreme anxiety of the youths to make the best of themselves, least they should be rejected as unfit for service, forms a striking contrast with the traditional policy of the Lombards and Venetians whenever the fatal day of conscription was near at hand. A stranger present in the ante chamber of the examination-room, watching the pale and squalid countenances and bent forms of the victims to whom a low number had fallen from the urn, must have wondered what had become of the comely stalwart youth who throng the Lombard cities, and of the athlete peasants who till the fertile plains. Unaware that for days before the examination, each candidate had purposely abstained from food, and resorted to every possible contrivance to obtain the appearance of an invalid, it must have seemed to him that consumption, become an epidemic, had exhaled its poisonous breath on all the young men as they attained the age of twenty. Nor was the chapter of accidents less remarkable. Here a sturdy peasant might be seen minus the first joint of his right thumb; here a handsome lad, disfigured by the loss of his front teeth—accidents of course: nevertheless the provincial delegate present at the examination, would not unfrequently offer the brutal suggestion that they had been "done on purpose to escape the white uniform." Now all is changed. If among the volunteers, a cough, carefully stifled, is detected by the examining doctor, he is informed that it is only a cold caught during the late festivities; wounds are "mere scratches," and the words "abile," "buone," (able or good for service,) falling from the surgeon's lips are received by the bystanders with acclamations of joy. Mothers, sisters, and young brides who used to form a sort of funeral procession as if following their loved ones to the grave, now hear them sentenced to a far more dangerous service, (for GARIBALDI's camp may be regarded as the Austrian target,) not merely with calmness but with triumphant joy I need not dilate to Americans on the difference of fighting for la patria and for the hated, hateful, hating Austria. By dint of repeated questions to the persons about the "gymnasium," of a run down to Como, (the chief depôt for the volunteers under drill for the camp,) and where some of the wounded are still lying, I have obtained the following succinct account of GARIBALDI's campaign; and as I know that this account has not appeared anywhere, I think it may be interesting to your readers.

When first invited to accept command in the approaching war, GARIBALDI did so on condition that there should be no French intervention but on certain counter propositions being made, (probably that he and his should have no contact with the French); he agreed to accept the command on the sole condition that the war should not cease till the Austrians should be driven out of Italy. A corps of 10,000 well-armed volunteers was promised, a battery (of eight cannon) and a cavalry squadron. But once his name given, and in virtue of that talisman an immense influx of volunteers obtained, the minister of war became very chary of his gifts. GARIBALDI was only permitted to enroll 4,500 volunteers, no cannon was given to him, and a mere handful of "guides." This corps was composed of four parts called regiments. ENRICO COSENZA, a Neapolitan artillery officer, who greatly distinguished himself at Venice in 1848-9, is Colonel of the First. GIACOMO MEDICI, a Lombard, famous for the defence of the Vascello, Colonel of the Second NICOLA ARDUINO, a Genoese officer in the civil war of Spain, Colonel of the Third. CAMILLO BALDONI, a Neapolitan artillery officer, Colonel of the Fourth.

The other superior officers were SACCHI, CERONI, BIXIO, FRIGERIO and FORESTI. Among the voluntary surgeons and doctors of the corps, the best known are AGOSTINI BERTANI, one of the most celebrated surgeon-doctors in Italy, PIETRO RIPARI, who, remaining behind after the entrance of the French into Rome, in 1849, to tend the Italian and French alike, with a safe pass from Marshal LE VAILLANT, was, nevertheless, thrust into the filthy dungeons of Paliano, where he languished seven years, and came out broken in health, gray and aged, but in spirit and love of country uncrushed, unconquerable; and ACHILLE SACCHI, also a valorous officer, still suffering from an incurable wound received at Rome, married but a year ago, to a patriot as ardent as himself, and who remains with her infant son in Genoa, illness and family ties might well have afforded SACCHI an excuse for remaining at home. But, no; he was first to join the volunteers, and as the decoration he received, proves is ever foremost in the ranks. The age of the soldiers varies from 20 to 30. Every Italian province is represented in these regiments; even a band of Calabrese is seen, and the youths who compose it performed the greater part of the journey from Calabria to the camp on foot, along the crest of the Appenines. There is also a band of Genoese Carabinieri, members of the Society of the Bersaglio, armed with rifles at their own expense, all first-rate shots. Among these latter is an Englishman, "of mature age," says my informant, "taciturn, resolute and unwearying." The Tuscan and Lombard elements predominate. The corps is not well equipped, and the muskets are nothing to boast of. If the celebrated inventor of the Maynard rifle desires to acquire for his invention a world-wide fame, he had better supply GARIBALDI's legion with a few hundreds; depend on it their merits will echo and recho in Austrian ears and reverberate in the form of orders from the war office as far as New-York! The volunteers are dressed in green jackets, loose trowsers, gray coats and caps a visiera, and carry their cartridge boxes and the linen pouch slung across their shoulders. They have neither overcoats nor tents. About a fourth of these soldiers belong to the wealthy classes; they are either proprietors, doctors, engineers, lawyers, students, artists, or merchants.

In order to understand the feats performed by these hunters of the Alps, of whom you have heard so much, we must track their steps from the day when GARIBALDI first led them into Lombardy. At that time the Austrian army lined the entire Lombardo-Piedmontese frontier, their left wing at Piacenza, their extreme right along the Ticino, as far as the Lago Maggiore and Italian Switzerland. Unable, with so small a force to pierce the enemy's lines, GARIBALDI was compelled to make a long march up to the foot of the Alps in order to surround them. On the 17th May he was at Biella, and thence proceeded by forced marches to Sesto Calende. Here, on the night of the 20th he made about 40 Austrian prisoners, and crossing the Ticino set foot on Lombard soil. On the 22d, he proceeded to Como, having to his left the Lago Maggiore studded with the enemy's steamers. On the 23d, Captain CRISTOFORIS, left to guard Sesto Calende, with two companies, (about 200 men,) was assailed by eight hundred Austrians endeavoring to regain that district; they were repulsed, leaving twenty prisoners besides the dead and wounded in the hands of the gallant captain. On the 25th GARIBALDI occupied Varese, the royal Commissioner VISCONTI VENOSTA calling on the inhabitants to arise and give themselves to V. EMANUEL. VENOSTA's proclamation reveals two things. 1. That the Lombards have long been on the eve of revolution, which has been kept down by the monarchical party. 2. That this party only seeks the annexation of Lombardy, indifferent to the fate of the rest of the peninsula! On the 26th May, General URBAN, who headed the free corps of the Roumains against the Hungarians in 1848, advanced towards Varese with 6,000 infantry, a squadron of cavalry, and four cannons. In the twinkling of an eye, the barricades are raised, the citizens with 200 "Hunters" left with them, and the remainder taking up their position outside. The combat lasted four hours. While the city looked to its own defence, GARIBALDI attacked URBAN, and defeated him. It was the squadron of Genoese riflemen whom I mentioned in my last letter, who decided this victory. The young Count BELGIOJOSO, and a young student named ROLLERO, noted even among those valorous ones for his indomitable courage, were among the dead. CAMILLO STALLO, a young Genoese, twenty years of age, the founder of the rifle corps in Genoa, seeing that a number of his companions (all good marksmen) yet failed to bring down the artillery men at the Austrian battery, exclaimed to five of them, "You load, I'll fire"—and he did fire five times in succession—each shot brought down an Austrian. As he took aim the sixth time, the remainder sprang to their horses and fled precipitately with the cannon, at the same time another band of "Hunters" attacking the same corps with the bayonet, the infantry likewise took to their heels, and STALLO was created officer on the battle-field. Glad tidings for his young bride, to whom he was united the day before he joined the camp.

On the 27th GARIBALDI pursued the enemy on the road to Como, then abandoning the main road to the right, took a bye-path to the left along the hills, and arrived unexpectedly on the 28th before Como, where the Austrians, reinforced to the amount of 8,000, with eight cannon, occupied the heights upon St. Fermo to Camerlata, where is the station of the railroad leading from Como to Monza and Milan. The volunteers commenced the combat on the hills of St. Fermo. Again the famous rifle corps formed the avant-guard; twenty-eight of them, fairly intoxicated by excitement, were far ahead of the rest as they commenced firing up the hill at the Austrians. Other columns fired from either side the wooded slopes. "It was as if we had been shooting hares," said one of their number to me. "There are two skulking behind the hedge." "Fire on that chap to the left of the tree." "There's one to your right." Such were the constant warnings we gave each other as we stopped to reload our own guns. Thus they fought their way to the top of the hill, then, rejoined by their comrades, drove the enemy down to the plain on the other side, towards the city. A battalion of Austrians had concentrated themselves on the plains of Pra Pasquè, in order to obstruct the path to the city. Without losing time in firing, the Hunters seized their bayonets and drove the battalion up to the suburbs of Viro, where joined by reinforcements, they turned upon the volunteers. Again defeated, they sped to Camerlata where they found the other corps dislodged, like themselves, from their position, having possessed themselves of the station in order to keep clear the retreat to Milan; but here, too, the volunteers pursued them, again attacking with the bayonet. At last, unable to resist longer, URBAN ordered the whole to retreat to Mariano. The volunteers, who had been marching ever since the 16th, and been marching and fighting ever since the 26th, now on the 28th, enjoyed a good night's rest at Como.

On the 29th GARIBALDI caused VICTOR EMANUEL to be proclaimed King, sent steamers up the lake to enlist volunteers, and towards evening left Como. From that date until the 2d June, the movements of the bulk of GARIBALDI's corps are still wrapped in mystery. A few of his troops were in the valley of Cuvio. Two companies attacked the fortress of Laveno, occupied by 500 men, and failed, owing to the disparity of numbers. Meanwhile URBAN reoccupied Varese and Como; for four days GARIBALDI's enemies exulted, and when the 1st of June came, his friends trembled. Was he reduced to the alternative of allowing his braves to be massacred or of taking refuge in Switzerland? Your correspondent was in England when the tidings of defeat first came. How we sickened as the Times was brought in morning after morning, and the telegraph column brought no news of GARIBALDI and his band. It was well known that when he crossed the Ticino reinforcements had been promised, and that none had been sent, nor was the fear, felt by NAPOLEON, of a popular movement, a secret. To excite such a movement at any hour, when he should feel the Italian cause betrayed, was and is in GARIBALDI's power. His troops are all republicans. Were they and he to be sacrificed like the Tuscan volunteers at Curtatone? These were the questions on every lip—questions to which as yet no satisfactory answer has been vouchsafed. GARIBALDI alone can solve the enigma for the edification of his soldiers and the world; and should the solution be one likely to sow discord in the public mind, depend upon it that GARIBALDI will keep silence until the conclusion of the war. However that may be, GARIBALDI reëntered Como on the 3d, and on the 6th, with strong reinforcements of volunteers, pursued his victorious march to Lecco and Bergamo, attacking the Austrians in their rear and flanks, falling even on them when they least expected it; always succeeding in giving them an impression that his numbers were superior to the reality. Hardly had they fled before him at Bergamo when orders arrived that they were to hold that city at any cost. Not only did the National Guard and the people render this impossible, but, after dispatching a few of his men northward to the Lake Iseo and the Val Canonica, to induce the people to revolt, and a small detachment to harass the Austrians at Palazzuolo, he with the remainder turned southward down to Nomana; then northward, suddenly pouncing on the Austrians at Brescia, who, as usual, departed at his approach. Arrived there, he learned that the sortie to Iseo had been successful; that volunteers were clustering to his standard, the Austrian steamer on the lake had been taken, and fessor. If you train soldiers in St. Peter's, why not store the pork in St. Andrew's?

On leaving Vercelli about 3 o'clock—and that, too, without seeing the famous manuscript of St. Eusebius—I encountered a train of about a hundred carts filled with wounded. The poor fellows were protected from the sun by branches or canvas, and were made as comfortable as possible by beds of straw. As we met them, some would turn a little to see what was passing, and then drop back again upon their bed of suffering. From three to six were conveyed in each cart. I was struck with the large number of Zouaves, and felt that these brave fellows have to pay dearly for their world-wide reputation. I was glad when this train of mangled, bruised, pallid, suffering humanity had passed me. It was a scene I shall never forget. A few nights before I had heard the shouts of victory. I knew that the cannons of the Invalides had awakened the old heroes who straggle about there, and here was more of the dark side of glory on its way to the Invalides.

The bridge over the Sesia is built of brick, and is about 400 feet long. Two of its arches had been blown up, and we crossed on temporary bridges. The broken bridge was fast being rebuilt, and promised to allow the trains to run in a week. The Austrians had thrown up extensive earthworks here, and from this point to Novara they destroyed hundreds of acres of wheat.

As they encamped on the way they apparently made an effort to do as much mischief as possible. I reached Novara in the evening, and here the environs seemed like one vast camp-ground. It was a most beautiful sight. Soldiers were pitching tents, preparing rations, unpacking and feeding horses. All was system, though at first glance it seemed like utter confusion. In passing about the camp there was the same civility to be met with that one receives from the French soldier in Paris. In the little town all was life and excitement. The officers of the forty thousand troops resting here for the night were in the streets and cafés, receiving all kinds of sympathy from the inhabitants.

Indeed, to treat a Zouave of Palestro fame, or to promenade with him was an honor for an Italian. And here it was that I saw one of those tigers embraced by a young gentleman of most respectable appearance. In the evening, until a late hour, I listened to the stories and songs of these simple-minded Algerians.

Those I happened to be with were in the Palestro engagement, and helped win a most brilliant victory. Their descriptions were most graphic, and always modest.

There was not the slightest individual swagger or vain-boasting. It is true, they talked of sticking Austrians with a coolness quite startling, but it is their nature to be quick and sly, and I sometimes think to love the taste of blood. At any rate, they have none of our sensibilities about the sacredness of life, and from this reason they make fine soldiers. Fond of glory and fond of daring, a great leader is their idol, and hence their admiration of NAPOLEON. In their songs they do not forget St. Helena.

In the morning following, or yesterday, I left Novara alone in a carriage for the Magenta battle-field. The army had already got the start of me on the road, and for ten miles I was in the midst of troops. As I had a spare seat I had not proceeded far before I saw that I was looked upon with envy by some of the soldiers, and finally it was politely asked for by a soldier who seemed to be suffering a little from the march. I, of course, invited him in, and mention the incident only to show his delicacy in wishing to get down when he found I was not an Italian. He said he should not have presumed upon asking the favor if he had not taken me for a native, and felt that he was defending my country. Such has been the conduct of the French since entering Italy. They have taken no advantages of their position wherever I have seen them encamping—by the way, it has always been in places where no harm could occur. In fact, the discipline of the French army is surprising. With this array of two hundred thousand men, in a strange country, not a single case of brutal outrage has been heard of.

When I passed through the earthworks on the west side of the Ticino and came out on the high bank overlooking the valley, which is nearly two miles wide, the scene was very fine. On the side of the hill a company of Zouaves were scattered in all directions, preparing their coffee; further on infantry were crossing the bridge, and on either side of the river were camps of Piedmontese artillery. But five days previous the rear guard of the Austrian army had occupied the same hill, and in their flight had attempted the destruction of the magnificent granite bridge before me. Fortune did not favor them, and so I was enabled to cross the Ticino on the 9th of June without hearing the word "passport." It is true the terrors of war had gone before me, and I crossed with a corps d'armée. Over this valley the road is elevated twenty or thirty feet above the fields, and rises in its approach to the eastern hights. After rising more rapidly through a cut it reaches the table land of the Lombard side, on the borders of which is carried the canal Naviglio Grande. On approaching this plateau you see the railroad emerging from the bank at about half a mile to the right.

This ridge formed the protection of the Austrians on the 4th—and could not be approached except by the central road, by the railway on the right, or at some distance to the left in the direction of Buffalora. From no point could the place be commanded. Yet the strategy of NAPOLEON in getting possession of this field was of the highest order. No definite knowledge of the position or movements of the body of the Austrian army could be obtained; so the allied forces cross in three places for velocity—all within cannon sound of each other. The Emperor took the central position, because he instinctively saw it was the most dangerous. Gen. MCMAHON had crossed the day before, and the King was to have crossed the same day about a dozen miles below. So while the engineers were putting down a pontoon bridge alongside the one partially destroyed, to give more rapidity, Gen. WIMPFFEN advanced towards the heights in front. On his approach he was warmly received, and then commenced the terrible contest.

The little band of about two thousand men could not wait for reinforcements, and pushed forward through a pass which was protected in front by two field-pieces, and on each side by embankments. So rapid was the first movement that the Austrians were forced back over the canal bridge, before they had really awakened to a sense of danger. The man that attempted to fire the bridge was stopped by a bayonet, and then the deadly fire of the enemy, protected by half a dozen buildings on the other side of the bridge, compelled them to retreat—but the powder under the bridge had been wet, and they gave way only to march forward again with the bayonet. Thus this handful of Frenchmen kept vast numbers of the enemy at bay for nearly four hours. When they got too far forward the concentrated fire from the buildings would stop them, and when the hard-fighting Germans had gained the bridge in their turn they were killed outright, or started into a stampede by the charge of the bayonet again.

At length order was given to take the buildings, and the advantage soon began to turn on the side of the Allies. The Emperor had found the position of the enemy, and pushed his forces from all points. As he came up with the division Regnault, the guns of MACMAHON were heard on the enemy's right. The battle then commenced on a broad scale. The Emperor commanded in front, MACMAHON was on the north, and VICTOR EMANUEL should have been present on the south, but, although the King has shown great personal bravery, it is now proved that he cannot handle troops with expedition. The Piedmontese are rather mortified to think they had no share in Magenta, especially when the fault is theirs. From the canal bridge to the village of Magenta is nearly a mile. Mulberry orchards extend the whole distance on both sides. A large portion of the mulberry orchard was planted between the trees with vines, and the remainder with wheat. The railroad station is perhaps forty rods on the north of the road, about midway.

This vast field, so admirable for defence, was in the possession of the enemy on the morning of the 4th, and on the evening of the same day it had been crossed by the tri-color. As I passed the bridge at the canal, I observed the plastered building was thickly spotted with bullet-holes.

The fields all the way to the village were trampled down like a frequented path. The mulberry trees were frequently shattered by cannon balls, and pretty generally peppered with bullets. The vines were totally destroyed. As I wandered about over this field, I could scarcely believe it had so recently been the theatre of one of the hardest fought battles on record. Every human body had been removed and buried. The remains of horses were fast disappearing. Nothing was allowed to rest in sight but Austrian hats, and these had been stripped of their trimmings by the peasants.

There was one other work, however, which assured me that the destruction of human life at Magenta had not been over-estimated. In very many places the ground was red.

About the Station-house the battle seemed to have been hardest in the later phase. The houses in the front of the village were riddled with bullets. The vicinity of the church, a little to the right as you approach from the west, showed marks of severe struggling. The church tower had received two cannon-shots, and the body of the church two or three more. In each case the balls went very cleanly through a brick wall of eighteen inches in thickness.

The villagers were all eaten out, and had hardly recovered from their alarm, but they were all wearing the tri-color. I went into a shop to buy some for myself as a souvenir of the place, where it had won, perhaps, its greatest victory, and while there a priest made a similar purchase, remarking to me he did it because he would not like to be taken for an Austrian. A few moments after I saw a Captain encounter this same priest, and asked him why a confrère of his should be a traitor to their cause. The priest said it could not be, and the Captain said, "I give you my word of honor such a one has been a traitor; he is now under arrest, and will be shot to-morrow morning."

When I left the battle-field the Zouaves I had passed in the morning had arrived, and were eagerly running over the place, evidently regretting that they had not been in the engagement which had made the place famous.

OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

State of the new Government—Opposition to Mr. Gladstone at Oxford—The Attitude and Character of Lord Chandos—Tory Speculations—Prince Esterhazy's Mission—Austria waiting to be beaten on the Mincio.

LONDON, Friday, June 24, 1859.

The new Administration can hardly be said to have as yet got under way. Most of the nominations to office have indeed been made, but the writs for new elections were only issued on Wednesday, and some of them are not returnable until the week after next. Mr. GLADSTONE will be vehemently opposed in the University of Oxford, for which he has now sat many years. Several of the most influential of his old Conservative supporters have this time declared their intention of supporting his antagonist, not from any personal preference for Lord CHANDOS, but to mark their disapproval of Mr. GLADSTONE'S strange inconsistency of conduct in supporting to the last Lord DERBY'S Government, then counseling and advising with his adversaries by what means it might be overthrown; then voting against the want of confidence motion, and finally taking office with the victors as soon as it was carried. The versatile orator's letter to the Provost of Oriel College, which was intended to serve the purpose of an election address to the constituency, has not mended his case. "His acceptance of office," said Lord BROUGHAM to a friend of mine, "was, under the circumstances, an act difficult of explanation, but one which after explanation is wrapt in utter darkness." So, at all events, thinks Dr. WALL, the well-known Professor of Logic; Prof. SEWELL, the still more influential Puseyite Divine, and Mr. KER SEYMER, M. P. for Dorsetshire, who, in his last contest for the University in 1853, was Chairman of Mr. GLADSTONE'S Committee. The feeling among the Heads of Houses and resident graduates at Oxford runs decidedly against him, but his friends say that if the clergy throughout the country can be induced to come up, he will still be the winner. This, however, is somewhat doubtful. In some dioceses the clergy are devotedly attached to the High Church views of the new Chancellor of the Exchequer, and they would travel far and fast to save him from defeat. Their unanimity, however, will now be broken by the defection of men like Prof. SEWELL and Archdeacon DENISON, while the Evangelical Party will everywhere poll to a man for his noble opponent. Lord CHANDOS is a plain, plodding and somewhat pettifogging specimen of the modern ducal breed. At College he was only known as the slowest young man of rank in his class. He showed as little aptitude for sport as for science, and knew as little about Greek as about gambling or rowing. His early penchant was for practical experiments in agricultural chemistry, and his cotemporaries remember how they used to quiz the staid and demure Marquis of nineteen for going about with specimens of manure in his pocket. In the House of Commons, which he entered at the prescribed age of aristocratic immaturity, he did nothing to distinguish himself. But the safe and steady-going heir to a dukedom—even though it be the bankrupt dukedom of Buckingham—was not to be neglected; so Lord DERBY made him Secretary of the Treasury, during his first administration, in 1852. He was subsequently chosen by the tuft-hunting Directors of the Northwestern Railway Chairman of their Board, for which position he had no other conceivable recommendation save that of being a Marquis, in want of £2,000 a year. When he had filled the Chair for some two years or more he gave up his seat in Parliament. I asked a lady the other day why he did so, as he was returned always free of expense. She replied that he had told her himself his reason was that "it brought him in nothing, and that he could not afford to throw away his time and labor to serve the public." His father, whose follies and failures have become notorious long ago, looks with horror on the thrifty disposition of his son, and deplores, amid all his poverty, that his heir should condescend to earn an income by sitting at a Railway Board. The foolish old Duke is in all things the extremest opposite of his son. He was once the proprietor of immense estates, most of which he derived by inheritance, but which his vanity, as leader of the landed interest, was not content with, and which he went on adding to year after year by purchases made with money borrowed at fifteen, twenty and, in one instance, forty per cent. Some ten years ago the smash, which everybody but himself saw was inevitable, came; and the Duke of BUCKINGHAM and CHANDOS was proclaimed to be not merely a pauper, but the obligor of a large amount of hopelessly insolvable debt. The palatial residence where he had long lived in regal state at Stowe was the subject of a marriage settlement, and could not be sold without his son's consent. The consent was given by anticipation; but its imperturbable proprietor disdainfully rejected the idea. Stowe might be swept and garnished by the Sheriff's officers, as it was eventually, not a shred of its magnificence escaping the hammer of the auctioneer, but no intrusive foot should ever be set as owner upon its sacred threshold; and it now stands silent and desolate in the midst of its surrounding woods, a melancholy monument of hereditary wisdom. The incorrigible Duke lives in a small house in Belgravia. He leads a rather disreputable life, being frequently in scrapes of one kind or another. Some time ago he was separated from his second wife, whom he was accused of treating badly, and his last performance has been the publication of his father's confidential correspondence relating to the Court and times of GEORGE IV., which has given infinite scandal and caused great pain to many innocent relations of the personages freely spoken of in the volumes in question. Lord CHANDOS and his father rarely meet, and never save to disagree. There is only one class of topics on which they agree. They are of one mind in party politics; and Lord CHANDOS is thus the champion of Toryism on the present occasion for the votes of Oxford. The other Ministerial elections do not attract much attention, but the Derbyites retain hopes of returning to power upon the end of the year. The new Administration starts without popularity, on account of its ultra-oligarchic composition.

Mr. BRIGHT is loud in his denunciations of his own exclusion; and Mr. ROEBUCK, Mr. HORSMAN and others, are likely to be in open opposition. Mr. COBDEN has not yet returned to England; but it is generally believed that he will refuse to join the Cabinet, where a seat is held vacant for him. The Irish are extremely angry at none but Englishmen being placed in office in the political government of that part of the empire. Mr. CARDWELL'S appointment is an infelicitous one, and has alienated not a few wavering supporters.

Prince ESTERHAZY is the object of much attention this week in the diplomatic circles. He avows that his mission is to beg of Great Britain not to interpose her mediation for peace, until called upon by Austria. His Court consider it still possible to retrieve the fortunes of war in Italy, and desire to be allowed to try their luck or destiny in another great battle on the Mincio.

NOTES OF THE WAR.

How Napoleon III. Makes War.

Correspondence of London Times.

BRESCIA, Sunday, June 19.

The march of the allied armies is not unlike the movement of a gigantic boa-constrictor following its prey; coil after coil of its enormous body rolls forward in uninterrupted succession until it suddenly stops. The prey must be near, for it entwines all the coils as close as its massive mobility admits, as if preparing for the spring. This is, just at this moment, the attitude. The mass of the body close together, and at rest, apparently, and only the head stretched out, as if to measure the distance. It is the concentration of strength and energy before employing it. The greatest part of the army is collected within a comparatively small space, from which it can throw itself at a moment's notice in any direction where its presence might be required. A council of war is held to-day to determine this, or rather to discuss the matter, for there is only one person who decides, and that is the Commander-in-Chief of the allied armies; and sudden and unexpected are these decisions. To be sure, nobody knows where he will pass the night, nobody knows where he is going; the order comes the last moment, and every one must be off. This secrecy is so striking that there is in the army a saying, 'Il fait la guerre en conspirateur.' And the saying is true enough; no conspirator ever kept his plans closer. Indeed, now and then, movements and counter-movements are made, people think, expressly to mislead and puzzle all calculations. Of one thing you may be certain, however, that the famous quadrilatère has been the object of study long before the war began; its strength is not underrated, and means are provided accordingly, adequate to the work. What these means are of course you don't expect me to tell, but you may prepare yourself for something astonishing and most unexpected. In fact, let your imagination roam through a world of conjectures, and if you have lost sight of everything familiar to your ideas you will be nearest the truth.

In the meantime we have occupied Salo, on the Lake of Garda, yesterday. It was with GARIBALDI'S corps, who act for the moment with the great army. Yesterday afternoon the Austrians brought up one of the steamers they have on the lake, and began shelling the place. In consequence some guns were sent up this morning, and some more troops were sent up in that direction, to be near in case of need.

Brescia is all alive with troops, the Guards encamping all round the town, on the ramparts, and the other corps in every direction close to this centre. They come in in masses, and have well nigh exhausted whatever the place offers of resources, especially in eatables and drinkables. All restaurants, hotels, cafés, wine, liquor and tobacco shops are undergoing a regular seige, so that most of them are nearly, others altogether, exhausted and shut up. The municipality encourage as much as possible the people to exert themselves and supply the demand, but in many cases it is really almost impossible. It is worse than at Vercelli or at Novara.

A number of bakers' shops have been taken up exclusively for the use of the Intendance, and they are making bread as fast as they can. But you may imagine what work it is to get together some days' rations of bread for so large an army, and its camp followers are now likewise receiving rations,—all those, for instance, attached to the auxiliary trains.

To-morrow, probably all this crowd will be miles distant, and, with the exception of some volunteers of GARIBALDI, very little remaining of a military force. The volunteers are drilling fast, and it is wonderful how quick they get on; of course, there are most of them above the average of intelligence to be found among conscripts, and, what is more, they do the work with pleasure."

PASSAGE OF THE CHIESE.

The Moniteur contains the following:

MONTECHIARO, Wednesday, June 22—10.40 P. M.

The French army has completed to day the passage of the Chiese at Montechiaro, which the Austrians evacuated the day before yesterday.

The cavalry has made reconnoissances, skillfully conducted by Captain DE CONTENSON, of the First Regiment of African Chasseurs. A grand guard of Uhlans was surprised. A few men were slain. Nine were taken with their horses. On their side, the Piedmontese have encountered the enemy in the direction of Peschiera. A rather brisk engagement ensued, in which two officers and a few Austrians were killed.

BATTLE OF MAGENTA—DEATH OF ESPINASSE.

A Milan paper publishes the following episode of the battle of Magenta:

"The Coadjutor of the parish of Magenta has been arrested. At daybreak on Saturday, the 4th inst., a company of Austrian troops was, at his suggestion, introduced into his house and concealed there. The Austrian immediately threw up some very strong barricades, and opened loopholes commanding the canal and the bridge, which the French were threatening to attack. The Coadjutor did more; he went across the bridge to the place occupied by NAPOLEON'S troops, and gave out that a single feeble corps of Austrians defended Magenta. His story obtained credit; with the troops he had at hand, and without waiting for those that were coming up, Gen. MCMAHON commenced the attack. The two regiments thus put in motion were the Sixty-fifth and seventieth of the line, which yesterday entered Milan. We have already spoken of the horrible fire which the Austrians, protected by the canal, opened upon them; from the batteries placed upon the bank, and which enfiladed the bridge, a close hail of balls was vomited, which tore through the dense ranks of the seventieth, and stretched numbers upon the earth. From the windows, where they were concealed, the Tyrolese Chasseurs sent their rifle bullet, aiming always at the gold epaulets. The combat had lasted an hour; in the repeated vigorous charges made to gain possession of the bridge, Gen. ESPINASSE, the Colonel of the regiment, and 17 officers out of 28 were killed or wounded. The Sixty-fifth succeeded to the Seventieth, and was received with the like fury. The Austrians were exulting, but the French, irritated by the fierce resistance, redoubled the energy of their attacks; their charges became more and more frequent, and they were superior to the enemy in the rapidity with which they loaded their muskets. Their sharpshooters picked off the artillerymen, who slackened the fire of their pieces. Meanwhile their attacks were repeated with fury, although a thousand men already lay upon the ground. The Sixty-fifth and Seventieth derived fresh courage from the well-known voice of the Colonel of the former regiment, a man of lofty stature, who, unwounded, in the midst of a tempest of bullets, waved his forage-cap, and ever shouted, 'En avant, mes enfans, en avant!'

At the moment in which the Austrian battalions were making their last efforts to resist, the Zouaves appeared, advancing at charging pace. They had come across a bridge constructed in 30 minutes by the French pontoon-men. On arriving at a short distance they fired two tremendous volleys on the dense mass of the enemy. The smoke obscured the air. It was the moment chosen by the chiefs to order a charge with the bayonet. With a furious shock the Zouaves, invisible through the smoke, fell upon the Austrians, who felt the cold steel in their bodies before they saw their foes. The first rank was overthrown upon the second, which became disordered and broke. The Piedmontese trumpets were then heard sounding the charge, and truly they came in time, for the enemy was in great force and held strong positions. With their rapid and powerful attack the Piedmontese regiments overcame the last efforts of the Imperial troops, which fell into disorder and began to fly in all directions. In a few minutes the whole army had disappeared from the field. The brave General ESPINASSE fell, pierced with several bullets, at the very moment when, with voice and gesture, he was urging on his men to the attack. He fell as a hero; covered with a mantle, he was borne away expiring on the shoulders of his soldiers, who were in tears.

THE ZOUAVES IN BATTLE.

From the London Globe.

PARIS, Tuesday Evening.

The Moniteur publishes this morning the contents of a diary or official report, captured after the battle of Magenta, and signed at midnight on the 3d of June by Major H. DE REDERN of the staff. This document completely upsets all the dispatches of GYULAI, and all the Austrian accounts hitherto put forth. It substantiates the enormous amount of troops brought into action and routed; enumerating every one of the twenty-two brigades, and the points at which they were discomfited in succession, at Palestro more particularly. The staff officer made his entries without the remotest idea of their publicity, but his log-book is a poser to all attempt at mystification.

One fact results not only from this war ledger, but from the conversation of all the officers now prisoners on parole in France, that the alarm and terror at the bayonet charge of the Zouaves is a perfect panic, and pervades the whole Austrian army. GARIBALDI'S name alone strikes a mysterious horror among the ranks, but the curved steel glittering on the musket-muzzle of these turbaned bayoneteers sends a shudder into the very soul of the Croats. Ignorance and stupidity (sedulously cultivated by a government) may make good subjects and passive tools, but mere animal strength must yield before intelligent impetus and animated virility. A regiment of Zouaves is a product which no effort of Austria could ever exhibit of native growth, the material and invigorating principle being utterly wanting in her population.

A Zouave is the race-horse among military bipeds; trained to every gymnastic and athletic feat, muscular in every limb, well rid of all superfluous flesh, and this human engine, so organized, is fired with a daring and indomitable spirit. At the Alma, the heights and crags deemed inaccessible, were climbed to the astonishment of both armies. The Malakoff tower was carried by the First Regiment of Zouaves, whose standard was the first planted on the stormed stronghold, Sept. 8, 1855. The Colonel of this regiment was then, and is now, the celebrated BOURBAKI, whose name, familiar among our Crimean officers, is sure to turn up on the next great battle. BOURBAKI'S men, with their irresistible rush, rescued our army at Inkermann. It was the Third Zouave Regiment that carried Palestro.

Having mentioned BOURBAKI, it is right to add that, as his name indicates, he is not quite a Frenchman, but a Greek by his father, superadding thus the wild Suliote or Albanian energy on the Gallic stock. His African exploits are less known out of that province, but evidence of his fame in Algeria is abundant in the popular songs of the barracks. I give a short specimen, referring to the new native African troops he has drilled:

Gentil Turco!	Smart Algerine!
Quand autour de ta boule	While round thy noddle
Comme un serpent s'enroule	Coiled up is seen,
ce calico	Snake like in model,
Qui te sert de shako,	That cot'on thou'st got on,
Je crie exquis, (chic (sic))	Spirit and dash
Que tu as acquis,	Where did ye get?
a qui	From no martinet
Le dois tu, a Qui?	But a bold Sabretash,
a Bourbaki!	Alone that knack he
	Hath our Bourbaki!

DETAILS OF THE BATTLE OF PALESTRO—AUSTRIAN CONTRADICTIONS.

The following appears in the Moniteur:

"In the precipitation with which the head-quarters of the Austrian army were removed from Abbiate Grasso, after the battle of Magenta, several important papers were forgotten. Among them is a report or journal, dated the 3d of June, at midnight, and signed 'H. DE REDERN,' Major of the Staff, and containing precise details concerning the combats of Palestro. It is curious to compare the recital of M. DE REDERN with that given by the Austrian journals. After having spoken of the strength and situation of the Austrian army, which had twenty-one brigades between the Ticino and the Sesia, the report continues as follows:

"'In the afternoon of the 30th of May, a Piedmontese division warmly attacked the Austrian advanced posts between Vercelli and Palestro. The battalion of Grenadiers of the Regiment of Leopold (Brigade Weigl, of the Seventh Corps) held Palestro for some time, but retired before superior forces. A column of two companies sent in support with two pieces of artillery was repulsed, and lost its guns. Another battalion was brought up, but it could not support the fire. The Division Lilia, of the Seventh Corps, composed of the Brigades Wiegl and Dorndorf, then took up a position at Robbio. On receiving this news the head-quarters were removed in the night of the 30th to Mortara. The Division Jellachich, of the Second Corps, (Brigades Szabo and Kudelka,) was marched from Cernago towards Robbio to support the Division Lilia, while the Division Herdy, of the same corps, went in the night to Mortara, where it arrived at 5 o'clock in the morning of the 31st. On the 31st Gen. ZOBEL was ordered to retake Palestro with the two brigades of his corps (the seventh) and those of the second corps. The brigade Dorndorf was directed to attack it in front; the brigade Weigl to proceed on the right of the Austrian line and attack the left of the enemy; the brigade Szabo, leaving Rossasco, was to turn the enemy by its own right; and the brigade Kudelka was to form the reserve. The combat commenced about 9 o'clock. In spite of the bravery of the column Weigl, it could not debouch, because the road, being narrow, would only allow two pieces of artillery to be brought into play, while the enemy had opened a successful fire with two howitzers. The General received a musket ball through his arm, but, notwithstanding the wound, remained for four hours after on the field of battle. The brigade Dorndorf advanced as far as the village, in spite of the heavy fire of the enemy, but was repulsed with the loss of 750 men. The brigade Szabo had commenced its march under the protection of a battery of 12-pounders, when it was suddenly attacked on the flank and rear by three battalions of Zouaves near Rivoltella. The seventh battalion of Chasseurs, which led the way, lost 500 men. The battalions of infantry quickly retired; but the battery, which got into a cross road, was all lost, with the exception of one gun. After the retreat of the 3d brigade Dorndorf, the general brought up that of Kudelka, which, as above-mentioned, was kept in reserve. KUDELKA reached the village, but was in his turn repulsed by superior forces. The combat had now lasted four hours, and the losses were very great, particularly in officers, when the first news reached headquarters at 1 o'clock in the afternoon.'

Nothing can be more clear than this statement. On the 30th Palestro was taken by the Piedmontese, who repulsed a battalion of the Regiment Leopold, (Seventh Corps,) then two companies, with two pieces of artillery, which they took, and next a third battalion sent against them. On the 31st the divisions Jellachich and Lilia attacked Palestro, and their brigades were successively repulsed, and the Third Regiment of Zouaves took five pieces of artillery from the brigade Szabo. The Austrians effected their retreat at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, after having suffered a loss of 1,250 men. Let us now see how the Austrian journals report the affair. The Austrian Gazette says:

"'The Piedmontese attacked Palestro, but were repulsed.' The Augsburg Gazette says: 'To drive out the Piedmontese who had possession of Palestro on the 30th, by surprise, during a violent storm, Gen. Baron ZOBEL resolved to attack the villages on two sides at the same time. The brigade of Gen. WEIGL, who was slightly wounded in the affair, had been recalled from Robbio, and made itself master of the groups of houses on the southwest of the village. It would certainly have made further progress if the brigade Szabo, sent for from Rossano, had not met at Rivoltella a French brigade which opposed a vigorous resistance. The impetuosity of the Zouaves could not, however, stand against the energetic resolution of the Austrian Chasseurs of the Seventh Battalion, who overcame every obstacle. On this occasion, as in every other, the Austrians had to contend against superior numbers. Their loss, without counting Gen. WEIGL, who was slightly wounded, was eight officers and 500 men wounded, and 300 men killed.'

On comparing the above reports, it will be seen—first, that the Austrian Gazette affirms quite the contrary of what really took place, and, secondly, that the Augsburg Gazette diminishes by one-half the Austrian forces beaten at Palestro, and reduces their loss from 1,250 to 808."

FRENCH NAVAL ARTILLERY FOR THE LAGO DI GARDA.

A letter from Alessandria of the 18th says:

"The passage of French cavalry through this place has ceased, and now comes the turn of heavy artillery and all the imposing material composing a complete siege park. I have also seen here several officers of the French Navy, which rather surprised me, as this place is more than 50 leagues from the sea. I went to the railway station to get some explanation relative to the appearance of those officers so far inland, and I there saw an immense quantity of naval articles, and among the rest six large wagons carrying gunboats taken to pieces, so as to be easy of conveyance. The passage of those boats through this place, accompanied by a number of sailors, has been going on for two or three days. These boats, when they left France, were intended to operate on the Po, and perhaps to act against Piacenza, but the battle of Magenta caused their destination to be changed. They are now being sent to the Lake of Garda, where they will lend a powerful aid to the army in the seige of Peschiera, as it is against that place, report says, that the Allies will first direct their forces."

SARDINIAN FLEET IN THE ADRIATIC.

The Nord says that a Sardinian fleet, composed of four frigates, will take part in the maritime operations against Austria. These operations will be of three kinds in the Adriatic—blockade, attack, and disembarkation. The Sardinian fleet are desirous of sharing in the operations of attack.

The Independente, of Turin, announces that a portion of the Sardinian fleet, composed of six war steamers, including the frigates Carlo Alberto and Vittorio Emmanuele, is to set sail immediately on active service.

MARCH FROM BRESCIA UPON THE LAGO DI GARDA AND THE MINCIO.

A letter from Brescia of the 18th, in the Pays, says:

"I arrived here yesterday, having learned that the Emperor was to make his entry this day. His Majesty marches regularly with the army, sometimes in the centre, and sometimes with the advance-guard, as circumstances seem to require. He is several hours a day on horseback, in the midst of the dust, and under a burning sun. He evidently desires to take his full share in the fatigues of a soldier's life, and the example which he thus gives has a most salutary effect on the army. For the last week, it has rained hard every night, after a tremendous heat during the day. The soldiers are most ingenious in their inventions for keeping off the rays of the sun. Some fabricate immense shades, by means of a handkerchief stretched on bent pieces of wood fixed in their knapsacks; others adjust branches of trees for the same practice. Nothing is more curious than to behold these ambulating shrubberies—they remind one of the moving wood spoken of by Macbeth. This town was illuminated last night, King VICTOR EMANUEL having arrived in advance of the Emperor. The latter quitted his headquarters at Travigliio early this morning, and arrived here about 9; the whole place was dressed out, and the reception given to His Majesty was most enthusiastic. The cry of 'E viva il nostro liberatore!' was universal. His Majesty occupies the Palace Fanarolli, and has not left that residence since his arrival this morning; a grand council, it is said, being held. I think we are on the point of great events. During the last few days the marches have been longer and more rapid. The various corps are now drawn closer together, and that of Marshal CANROBERT advances on a line with that of Marshal DE MCMAHON. The Sardinian army has likewise effected its junction with the French. It is said that two days' rest are to be given here to the troops, and that then they are to go forward in the direction of Peschiera. As the Mincio must be crossed, one of the bridges of boats which had been cast over the Adda, at Cassano, has been taken up and transported here. In addition, gun-boats brought by land are to be conveyed to the Lake of Garda. Admiral DUPOUY, commander of the Reine Hortense, passed through this place yesterday en poste to organize the service of these vessels, which are to arrive here without delay. All these things lead to the belief that a grand engagement is near at hand.

The Lake of Garda, here spoken of, is the largest of the Italian lakes, being 37 miles in length by 7½ in breadth. It is surrounded on all sides by mountains; on the west by a prolongation of the Tonal chain, ending in the heights of Lonato and Castiglione, where NAPOLEON gained his celebrated victory in 1796, by suddenly raising the siege of Mantua, and, by a series of rapid and victorious manœuvres, preventing the junction of the corps d'armées of QUASDANOVICH and WURMSER, which he attacked and routed one after the other. On the east it is separated from the river Adige by Monte Baldo, on which are the heights of La Corona and Rivoli, famous for NAPOLEON'S victory over ALVINZY'S corps of Austrians in January, 1797. The Mincio leaves the Lake of Garda at Peschiera, situated on an island formed by the river at its exit. Peschiera is an important fortification, the works of which, since the events of 1848, when it fell into the hands of CHARLES ALBERT'S army, have been greatly strengthened. On the right or west bank of the Mincio the works have been extended to some distance, so as to form an entrenched camp large enough to contain a strong division. Besides the additional strength imparted to the town of Peschiera by this camp, it is of importance, because it threatens the flank of an army attempting the passage of the Mincio, at Gioto or Valeggio. The flotilla of the Lake of Garda, for which Peschiera serves as a harbor, is available for making sudden descents on the shores of the lake, and might cause annoyance to the advance of an army from the West as the Franco-Piedmontese now are, by threatening an attack in its rear. Sluices also have been established at Peschiera for the purpose of raising the level of the waters of the lake at pleasure, and of destroying by the flushes which would be felt as low as Mantua, the bridges of boats or frameworks of temporary bridges that the enemy might throw across the Mincio between these two towns. From Peschiera the Mincio runs to the southeast by Monzambano, where the French effected a passage in 1800, Borghetto—passage of the French in 1796—Pozzolo, where the French were victorious in 1800, and Gioto, at the meeting of the roads from Brescia and Cremona. Lower down it forms two lakes—one above, the other below Mantua—and joins the Po at Governola.

AUSTRIAN LOSSES, TROUBLES AND MOVEMENTS.

London Times Correspondence.

In a letter addressed to an acquaintance of mine, an inhabitant of Vicenza states that above 1,000 wounded men are now lying in the hospitals of that city, and it must be concluded that he has paid them a visit, as he remarks that the officers and privates who are less severely injured kill time by rallying at GYULAI. This morning information was given me that the whole country up to Gratz, in Styria, and Brixen, in the Tyrol, is full of hospitals and infirmaries, to which the wounded and sick will be gradually removed. It was not till yesterday that we learned what became of the First and Second Corps d'Armée after their retreat from Magenta during the night of the 4th inst. They reached Milan in the evening of the 5th, and marched, "without taking any refreshment there," by way of Melegnano, to Lodi. A Mantua correspondent states that some of the regiments quitted Magenta in groups of from 20 to 100 men, and were unable to find their several battalions and corps for two or three days. On the 5th more than 3,000 men, who had been completely dispersed, arrived at Milan, and quitted the city with the garrison. On the 14th, the "General Commando" of the army was at Villafranca, a town midway between Mantua and Verona. The head-quarters of the second army were at Castiglione, on the left bank of the Mincio. From Verona we learn that the troops are exceedingly impatient to have another trial of strength with the Allies, but that some days are likely to elapse before a battle is fought. General Baron REISCHACH received three wounds at Magenta, and a Zouave, who sent a bullet into his thigh, called out, "C'est pour vous, mon Général," just before he took aim at him. Prince NAPOLEON is advancing towards the Po, and it is to be feared that the Austrians will give the Allies time to concentrate their forces before they proceed to attack them. The slowness of the Austrians would be ludicrous if its consequences were not so frightful.

The last official news from the seat of war is, that French troops are marching by way of Morbegno and Sondrio to meet the Austrian forces, which, having crossed the Stelvio, are advancing on Bormio, in the Valtelline. Yesterday the Emperor inspected the 7th and 8th corps d'armée.

The night before last the Vienna populace displayed a strong inclination to "lynch" a vagabond who was being conducted to prison by two policemen. The man, who was supposed to be a French spy, would probably have lost his life if troops had not opportunely come to the rescue. The disturbance at Venice on the 13th inst. might have been very serious but Lieutenant-General Von ALEMANN displayed less energy. The Place of St. Mark was immediately occupied by the troops, and the soldiers who were attached in the streets were permitted to make use of their weapons. Many persons were arrested, and on the 14th everything was perfectly quiet. A report that Venice was to be surrendered to the Allies in three days, as the cause of the movement, which was encouraged by bands of intoxicated men, who paraded the city with tri-colored ribbons and cockades.

AUSTRIAN EXACTIONS IN LOMBARDY.

A letter from Brescia, in the Siècle, relates a fresh exploit of Gen. D'URBAN, as he passed through Calcio some short time back:

Being desirous of continuing the traditions of his predecessors, he immediately on his arrival summoned to his presence the heads of the municipality. When they arrived, he ordered them in a peremptory manner to deliver to his army, within the delay of seven minutes, 100 oxen, 100 sacks of oats, 100 casks of wine, and 12,000 swanzigs. The delegates remonstrated, saying that the village was poor and that the time allowed was too short. The only answer made by the General was to draw out his watch, and, pointing at the hour, to say, "The delay I allow has commenced, gentlemen." The delegates looked at each other in alarm, and after a minute's consideration proposed a sum of 14,000 swanzigs in lieu of the other objects demanded. The General made no answer until the seven minutes had expired, when he said that he would make no compromise, and arrested the delegates as hostages. On the following day, during the hasty retreat of the Austrians, the three prisoners effected their escape and returned to Calcio. These gentlemen, who are M. RICCI, advocate, and MM. RESELLI and BONETTI, landed proprietors, have been presented to the Emperor at the Villa Odofredi.

MARCH OF PRINCE NAPOLEON UPON LOMBARDO-VENITIA.

London Times Correspondence.

TURIN, Tuesday, June 21.

The fifth corps of the French army, under the command of Prince NAPOLEON, is advancing from Tuscany, and was the day before yesterday at Massa on its fourth day's march from Florence. The Tuscan division, led by General ULLOA under the Prince's orders, has lately been mustering at Pistoia, and will then cross the Apennines by the Abatone pass, and descend into the Lombard plain at Modena. The Tuscan vanguard crossed several days ago, and has actually reached the town of Modena, which is deserted alike by Austrian and Ducal troops. The Duchy is governed now by FARINI, the historian, in the name of VICTOR EMANUEL. A particular friend of mine, an artist, who has entered the Tuscan army as a private soldier, writes me from Massa on the 19th a letter, an extract of which I give below.

Massa is the capital of a Duchy arising out of the feudal chaos of medæval Italy, and for a long lapse of ages acknowledging the sway of the Genoese house of Cibo. The last of this race—a female, MARIA BEATRICE—brought her little estate as a dowry to the Austrian Archduke, who then—towards the close of the last century—governed Milan. His son, FRANCIS IV., of Modena, had the good fortune to obtain by inheritance the estates of the Houses of Este and Cibo. He was the Prince who, from 1814 to the day of his death, won for himself the appellation of the "Little Tiberius of Italy." His son, FRANCIS V., began with a somewhat milder rule, but they have combated the opposition of the Roman Curia and maintained public order. The Roman people have resolved to present swords to the Emperor and to Victor Emanuel, and a subscription has just been opened for this object, to be limited to a paolla, or a silver piece of 30 bajocchi, or a shilling. The names appended to the list are innumerable, though many have doubtless subscribed to create an impression of their being Liberals. From what I hear, Antonelli does not appear to have any intention of retiring from power. On being asked recently by a friend if there was any truth in such report, he replied that some difference had arisen between him and the Pope in the last week, but that it was now healed, and there was no question of any change. However satisfied the Pope may be with his Secretary of State, the people certainly are in a great state of dissatisfaction with him.

Intelligence daily from the provinces speaks of the great enthusiasm which prevail there, and of the spirit almost irrepressible, which exists for a general rise and union with Tuscany. France, however, it is noted, by means of letters, uses every effort to maintain tranquility, and urges patience till the termination of the war. In the Romagna there were great festivities on the capture of Milan. In Ravenna, Faenza and Forli, Italian and French flags were hung out in the theatres; even in Perugia—still under the bayonets of Austria—it was impossible to keep down the expression of public joy.

SATURDAY, June 18.

The fact of the evacuation by the Austrian troops of Bologna and of Ancona on Saturday last, is of great importance. Not the slightest notice of such a move had been given beforehand to the Papal Government, for whose assistance the Austrians professed to have occupied those cities. The following incidents preceded or accompanied closely the evacuation: On the 5th of June the Austrians, as it to celebrate a victory, after the battle of Magenta, paraded the band through Bologna. The people, on hearing it, reured immediately, and the public places in that neighborhood were closed. The Pontifical authorities, who well knew the spirit of the people, ought to have counseled the Austrian General to observe greater prudence at least, the more so as there were Roman troops, too, in garrison; but the Delegate, Cardinal Marini, at all times incapable, is more especially so in times of danger. The General, irritated by this public act of contempt, ordered that on the 9th there should be a general rejoicing, in consequence of the promotion of Giulai to the Bannato. The Bolognese thereupon assumed the appearance of a general mourning, suddenly shut up their shops, not even excepting the cafés, with the exception of the one which was frequented by the Austrian officers. There was no disturbance created by the people, but as they passed the Austrians in the streets they gave unmistakeable signs of their hatred for them. On the following day the officers made a representation to their commanding officer that they were displeased with their position, and begged to be removed to some other locality. The General expressed his sympathy with them, and said that he had three times written to Vienna, urging their recall, but receiving any answer; acding that he would urge it again. Meantime he determined on calling the people to order, but no one would post the bills. Only four or five copies were posted by two soldiers, and these were torn down by the people immediately. On Friday, the 10th, the people were assembled in groups, ready to break out into serious acts of violence. No repressive measures were taken, either by the Austrian or the Pontifical autnorities; but during the nights of the 10th and 11th preparations were made by the Austrian Commander for leaving, the troops amounting to about 4 000 men. As similar preparations were made in Ancona on the same day, the inference is that simultaneous orders had been received by the two garrisons. As soon as the fact of the evacuation was known in Bologna the people gave way to exultation, and assembled in the Piazza Gigante, where the Delegate resides. The Marchese Pepoli, Marchese Tomara, and Conte Malvezzi, members of the most distinguished families of the city, presented themselves to the Cardinal, and suggested that, in order to insure the obedience of the people to the Papal Government, concessions were necessary. The Cardinal refused, and, fearing a rise, followed the Austrians to Ferrara, whence he sent to Bologna a protest against the Provisional Government which had been formed in his departure. At the head of it were the three noblemen above-mentioned and Casalini, a young man not known in Bolognese society. These facts were known in Rome on the telegraph on the Saturday, and great apprehension was felt at the Vatican, where the impression was that the whole of the Romagna had risen. Gen. Goyon immediately offered to occupy Bologna with French troops, but Antonelli refused the offer, alleging his unwillingness to violate the neutrality. For fifteen days or more, foreseeing the events which were threatening, Goyon had offered a similar assistance, which was invariably refused, and the idea is that Antonelli has placed his hopes on a revolution and a reaction. After the "functions," however, in the Sistine Chapel, at Whitsuntide, the Pope called Cardinals Altieri, Della Genga, Sanucci and de Pietro to a Council, and it appears to be positive that, as one result, a note was sent on the 13th or 14th to France demanding French intervention, which we shall probably see, as soon as the evacuation of Ancona is completed. At Rimini the Austrians will abandon the Romagna, and, perhaps, march to Ormachio or Ferrara. At Ancona they have left munitions of war, cannon, and provisions, inflicting no damage on the city, which had been kept in a constant state of agitation for the last two months. A corps of artillery left Rome for Ancona on the 13th, and an order was given to two companies of the line to leave Macerata and garrison it. Here, in Rome, as the French have observed, the Roman police have acted recently almost as the protectors of the canaille of the city, who might be useful in a reaction or a row; so much so, indeed, as to awaken some fears for the public safety. For this reason the French have employed a large force of gendarmerie, and have patrolled the streets night and day with considerable forces. Papal troops have left, and continue to leave, Rome for Perugia and other districts on this side of Ancona. There is great fear that the insurrection will extend to every part which has been evacuated by the Austrians. Cardinal Antonelli spreads the report that it is under his influence that the Austrians have left the Papal States.

Marseilles, Friday.

Advices have been received from Rome to the 21st inst. On Sunday the crowd assembled before the French garrison, and were about to display the tricolor flag, and to proclaim the dictatorship of Victor Emanuel, but Gen. Goyon prevented it. Strong patrols traversed the town yesterday. The Pope has notified his protest against the dismemberment of his States to the Powers represented at the Paris Conferences. At Genoa yesterday the Pope addressed the Consistory on the separation of Romagna from the States of the Church. His Holiness communicated to the cardinals a letter of the Emperor Napoleon, guaranteeing the independence of the Papal States. The delegate of Ancona has withdrawn into the fortress with the troops who have there fortified themselves.

The Debats publishes a letter from Rome, complaining that the jails were let loose by the authorities on the night of the illumination for Magenta. A student of the French Academy had been stilettoed by these miscreants on the Piazza di Spagna. Another caught robbing a watch, took refuge in the Church of St. Lorenzo in Damaso, and the two Chasseurs de Vincennes lugged him out in defiance of the asylum. Antonelli ordered him benefit of clergy, and he got off. The boy Mortara had been "confirmed," with great display, in the Church of St. Peter's Chains (ad vincula).

The Paris correspondent of the London News writes, June 24:

"The bloody conflict at Perugia between the Pope's Swiss guards and the people is considered, in Government circles, as a deplorable event. It no doubt tends greatly to increase the difficulty of the task which the French Emperor has undertaken of preserving the temporal dominion of the Pope while emancipating Italy from the Austrian yoke. The Papal forces are confessedly inadequate to repress the national movement which has broken out in many large towns of the States of the Church. The policy of selecting a little mountainous village like Perugia, where the population is too small to offer effectual resistance, for shedding blood in the name of Papal authority, may well be doubted. The event is likely to double the intensity of the revolutionary movement in Bologna, and to excite insurrection in all the disaffected parts of the Papal States that have hitherto remained tranquil. The Romans, rightly or wrongly, consider themselves included in the Emperor Napoleon's Milan proclamation, addressed to the "Italian people," and claim the benefit of his promise that the French army shall not interfere with the manifestation of their "legitimate wishes." Unless, however, the Swiss hirelings, now masters of Perugia, shall be supported by French troops, nothing is more likely than that they will speedily be driven out by an overwhelming national force.

The Pays, in answer to "various correspondence," which persists in affirming that King Victor Emanuel is disposed to accept the dictatorship which has been offered him by certain towns in the Roman States, asserts that all these rumors are completely false, and that the King has refused any sort of dictatorship, whether "provisional" or otherwise.

NAPLES.

All Naples was taken by surprise at the appointment of a permanent British Minister here. From what had passed within the last month, such a step was far from being expected, nor did it appear to have been justified by the policy of the present sovereign. To say nothing of the communication which had been made officieusement before the appearance of Mr. Elliot, that if a Constitution were given by the Neapolitan Government, England would send a Minister, at the time the new appointment was made not a single concession had been granted. There was, therefore, an unbecoming haste in renewing relations; and there are many who would have desired, and who think that the political position of Italy demanded, that England should have been represented at Naples by men thoroughly Italian in their sympathies and progressive in their ideas.

As some of the results of Mr. Elliott's mission, I have to apprise you that on Thursday night late, three decrees were published, to the following effect: An amnesty is granted to those condemned to irons, seclusion, relegation, or imprisonment for political offences committed in 1848 and 1849 exceoting those mentioned in the decrees of 27th December, 1858, and 18th March, 1859; the former of whom are Poerio and his companions; and the latter, not yet out of the country, are still condemned to exile. The action of this decree, therefore, is restricted to those who have already suffered ten years' confinement; some of whom, perhaps, have only two or three years more to complete their term of punishment, and excluding others of those compromised in 1848 and 1849 such as Poerio and his companions, who have received the mercies of exile.

Another decree relieves all those engaged in the political turbulences of 1848-49 from all civil disabilities—enables them to procure passports and doctor's degrees, and to serve in any public office. The number of those so relieved is enormous. A person who had occasion to make some inquiries for a friend of his—an "attendibile"—tells me, that five folio volumes were searched, full of names of these unfortunate persons. This measure is a great relief, as it comprises, at a moderate calculation, 60,000 persons. Those who are in prison without trial are left as they are, as are the persons who were arrested last week after the demonstration. Filangieri has urged their liberation; but his Majesty, fearing that it may be regarded as a sign of weakness, has hitherto refused it; thus making the sovereign will the law of the country.

A third decree grants three years' diminution of punishment to all condemned for ordinary offences.

A fourth decree is intended to please the poorer class: "All articles of dress, cloth, and common metals, pledged for sums under two ducats, up to 15th June, shall be redeemed, capital and interest, by our royal Treasury, and restored gratuitously to the pledgers."

The week has been marked by arrests, and a display of public force occasionally in the streets. Count Satriano appears to have been the great bugbear of the Neapolitan Government. If he went to the café to eat his ice in the cool of the evening, his carriage was surrounded by police; if he took a drive through the city, the sinister eye of a commissary was sure to be levelled at him; and when he went to have his audience of the King, a large force of soldiery, gendarmes, and policemen were arranged throughout the city to maintain order. It showed, indeed, what was the public spirit, and how dangerous it was supposed to be to the interest of public order. But if it be so, it may be attributed to the imprudence of the Government, which will allow nothing and do nothing, and only, a month after the King's death, has published an act which is usually published on the first day of a reign. Count Satriano had his audience on the 15th and his Majesty came in to receive him in Naples, fearing the effect of the Count's passing through the city en route to Capo di Monte. The King was accompanied by the Queen and two brothers in one carriage, whilst in another carriage were two others of the royal brothers, and two gentlemen in waiting. The cortège was guarded by cavalry and infantry, and entered and left the city by circuitous routes, instead of going right through the capital. The royal palace during the whole of the morning appeared to be in a state of siege, so strong was the display of military and police force and even at midnight I saw patrols of soldiery parading the Toledo. So great are the acknowledged fears which the Government entertains of disturbance. Any one who took his stroll in the Villa Reale during the last fortnight, will have perceived a patrol of the foreign regiment stealing through the avenues to guard, as it were, the crinolines. An amnesty was a necessary concession to the Western Powers, and the screw has been put on to obtain it, but time has to unfold what is in reserve. It is never the policy of the Neapolitan Government to do more than what it is absolutely compelled to do. It is extraordinary that whilst the modified amnesty already described has been granted, nothing has been done as yet for those in prison without trial. In favor of these a petition was presented to Mr. Elliot on Thursday last. It runs thus: "The undersigned political prisoners in the prisons of S. Maria Apparente, in their name and in that of others unable to speak because they are shut up separately, make known to your Excellency that for upwards of two years and a half they have been imprisoned, and for the first few months deprived of every assistance from their families, without knowing the cause of their arbitrary arrest. It having come to their knowledge that your Excellency has been sent on a special mission to Naples on occasion of the happy succession to the throne of his Majesty Francis II., they indulge the hope that your Excellency will take to heart the unhappy position of so many persons, and that the Government of his Majesty, yielding to the applications of the representative of a nation eminently the protectress of individual liberty and public law, will restore them to domestic peace, or grant them a public trial, that their innocence may be made clear, &c." This petition confirms the tale which your correspondent has often narrated.

On Wednesday evening 1 st the English residents and visitors in Naples were gratified oy another of those fêtes which it has been their good fortune to enjoy on several occasions during the last two years on board British ships of war. Following the courteous example of the captains and officers of the Malacca and the Centaur, who have left behind them so many agreeable reminiscences, Captain Patin and the officers of her Majesty's ship the Centurion gave a ball on Wednesday last to about two hundred persons, principally English. Amongst the visitors were the Honorable Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Mr. Peter, Mr. Moore, the American Minister, the French, Russian and British Consuls, and many officers of the United States frigate the Macedonian, and of the Russian frigate now in port. Dancing was kept up till 3 o'clock in the morning, and, as has usually been our good fortune, the beauty of the evening and the tranquility of the sea combined with the politeness of the excellent host and his officers to render this the most agreeable fête of the season.

From Sicily, which is almost a sealed book to us, I hear that a few days since there was a strong demonstration in Palermo. The authorities telegraphed to Naples for instructions, and orders were given to bring out the troops, which was done. There was, however, no collision, though the arms were said to have been removed from the Austrian Consulate.

At Messina the following incident is reported to have taken place, though it will not guarantee it. A donkey clad in tri-colored ribbons, was driven by a number of lads into the Piazza. In one ear was stuck the letter F, in the other II., and on his forehead the proclamation announcing the ascent to the throne of his Majesty. The police soon despoiled the donkey of his finery, and then left him, hoping he would retrace his steps to his stall and betray his master; but it appears that the donkey was utterly lost, and might have been brought in from the country.

I cannot refrain from adding, that the more I see of the Neapolitans, the more I am convinced of the general discontent with the decrees of the 16th inst. "They are a 'burla,' an 'inganno,' an 'insulto,'" are words in every one's mouth. Pity that this Government never does anything in time or gracefully; everything is too late or imperfect. At the last moment I hear that the great demonstration in Palermo was made on occasion of the illumination of the Sardinian Legation after the battle of Magenta. Last Sunday and Monday nights the arms of the Austrian Consul were covered with blood. Troops out during the week. Here in Naples I hear that "Down with the Bourbons!" has been found written on the walls in many places. Some of the employes in the telegraph office have been arrested on a charge of having a secret machine, with which they send and receive dispatches.

TUSCANY AND NORTHERN ITALY.

The Monitore Toscano publishes a ministerial circular ordering the prefects to respect free manifestations, and the popular wish for annexation with Piedmont. The circular denies the possibility of a return of the former dynasty, and declares that divisions of territory would enfeeble Italy. Victor Emanuel is the symbol of union and of liberty.

The Governor of Milan has issued a decree that all deeds and other legal documents are henceforth to begin, "Under the reign of H. M. Victor Emanuel I. King of Sardinia, Prince of Piedmont, &c., &c." By another decree, all letters of exchange falling due within the 3d and 14th June are to have ten days' grace.

The Paris correspondent of the London News writes June 24:

A telegram from London states that it has been "decided" that Tuscany shall not be annexed to Piedmont. All questions of territorial settlement being reserved for discussion when peace shall be made, the absurdity of this statement, which assumes a partial decision of a question wholly reserved for future consideration, has probably given rise to the following paragraph in this evening's Pays:

Some journals appear to us to attach undue importance to the different shades of opinion in Tuscany touching the future destiny of that country. That there should be in Florence sympathies in favor of annexation to the kingdom of Sardinia, and also a feeling for a separate and independent existence, shows only that there is a question to be solved by the Italians themselves when the proper time shall come. France has nothing to do with it. France never had any intention to busy herself about any new distribution of the Italian States. We have resisted Austrian aggression with the sole view of freeing Italy from foreign pressure, and from the consequences of that pressure, which are no less hurtful to Europe than to Italy herself. We are in Italy to put an end, by the establishment of order founded upon national and independent bases, to those political agitations and commotions which, under the name of the Italian question, have caused uneasiness and anxiety in Europe for the last half century. We have no other thought. It is quite natural that the Italians should already give expression to their affections and tendencies; these are their own affairs; the work which we have undertaken is paramount, and quite unconnected with these isolated facts."

Doubts are thrown upon the accuracy of the speech attributed to the King of Sardinia, in answer to a deputation from Bologna. You will remember that, when I gave this speech from the Patrie, I noticed a prefatory assertion of that journal which argued a doubt. It now appears that the King has actually appointed two Provisional Administrators of Bologna, the Marquis d'Azeglio and the Marquis de Rora, and that he does not intend to abandon the Roman provinces to anarchy if the Pope shows himself unable to protect them.

According to the Independante, of Turin, two of the main streets of that city are to be named Montebello and Palestro; and all the soldiers of the allied armies who may die in Turin will be buried in a special cemetery, and honored with a noble monument.

The Moniteur, of June 19, gives an enumeration of all the officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the Army of Italy put hors de combat at Magenta and Malegnano. The figures are as follows:

The English Court and the War—A Word with King Leopold and the Coburg Family Influence.

From the London Times, June 23.

When the hawk is in the air the barndoor fowl will flutter and scream. But an alarm may be well-founded, yet carried beyond the limits of reason. The Assurance offices most emphatically warn people not to move their furniture in a hurry. A thick party-wall takes some time to burn through. There are party walls in politics as well as in house-rows, and ill terrified house-holders sometimes throw their tables and chairs, and themselves, too, out of window before there is any need, or incur a certain flood of water to escape the mere chances of a scorching, nations can do themselves the same foolish damage. The smaller States of Europe are quite right to keep up their defences in a good serviceable condition. Of course, there is no knowing what may happen. A hundred contingencies, not at all uncomplimentary to the belligerents now in the field, may bring the torrent of war over other ground. For example, we confess we should hear with great dismay of anything happening to Napoleon III. of a sort to transfer to new hands the Government of France and the conduct of the war. It is the duty of every State that cares for its independence to protect itself to the best of its ability. But that is a very different thing from joining the war by anticipation, proclaiming partisanship, fixing upon men the characters they repudiate, and creating difficulties in the way of a better course. A few towns in Germany, which, in the event of war coming their way, would simply be trodden under foot and smothered by armies, are loud in their abuse of France. They defy her, and challenge her once more to violate that Fatherland which in the map of history is one huge battle-field. Cannot England, which has so often and so fruitlessly assisted the Continent with money and arms, assist it better with her example and advice? Cannot she teach it to imitate her own insular neutrality?

King Leopold is on a visit to our Court, and it is likely enough that this experienced sovereign should contrast with anxious feelings the vicinity of a Napoleon with the protection of a father in-law. Belgium is not the country that can contemplate without misgivings a sanguinary war between France and a German State. It is with Austria that she is now connected by family ties. But a Napoleon is not the worst thing Belgium has to fear. In 1848, when France rejected the Orleans dynasty, Belgium was all alarm. Louis Napoleon was residing quietly in St. James', and doing duty as a special constable. Lamartine, Cavaignac, almost every Frenchman of known courage and ability, had a better chance of a French throne than a Bonaparte. The spirit of the French nation was then the bugbear. It was France, all soul, all nerve, all emotion, all fire, with no field for her ambition, and scarce room for her people. King Leopold thought of Antwerp, and wished it were safe. He listened to hear it cried in the streets of Paris that the Rhine was the natural boundary of France, and respect for a wise and good man prevents us from specifying the effect it would have had on his movements. So it is not in the name of Napoleon, or in a war between a Napoleon and Austria, that consists the danger. For Belgium, it is better that her powerful and excitable neighbor should be in the grasp of one man capable of taking a comprehensive view of his interests and those of France. It might be the interest of any ambitious General, or any demagogue, to recommend an invasion on any or no reason. He might care little for the question of right, and his stake might be only that of the ordinary adventurer, who gains by success and loses nothing by defeat. What if the civilized world were indignant? What if an army were destroyed? He would survive to repeat his pernicious counsels, with the turn of fortune now in his favor. On the contrary, it is of the greatest importance to Napoleon III. to stand well with Europe, and not to have a serious mischance. His apologies may not be always quite satisfactory, but they are apologies and tributes to the paramount claims of public morality. He knows and feels better than any man in France the consequences of betraying that reckless acquisitiveness which marked the career of his uncle. He feels the difference between a fixed and an advancing frontier.

Central Europe has shown that it is not necessarily concerned in a war arising out of the conflicting interests of great Powers in the smaller Mediterranean States. England, France and Russia have all a deep interest, or choose to feel one, in the disposal of Turkey and the detached kingdom of Greece. Austria and France have a like interest in Italy. The nature of these interests it is needless to scrutinize. The fact of an interest which has led to frequent interference, occupation, and invasion is enough for the purpose. The three first mentioned Powers waged a costly war, and finally settled the affairs of Turkey without embroiling Germany, even though Austria was substantially interested in the result. She could then afford to be neutral, and, of course, all Germany, though not without some reason for keeping Russia within bounds, was also neutral. The present case is merely a repetition of the former on a somewhat smaller scale between only two great Powers and with still less pretension to a European quarrel. The only interest of Europe in Italian affairs is to leave Italy to itself, and keep Italy to itself. We believe it also to be the interest of the neighboring States to leave her alone, for she can only occupy their attention and their armies without contributing any equivalent support. Were France, at the loss of 50,000 men, to find herself occupying Italy with a hundred thousand, she would not be in a better condition for molesting the rest of Europe. Nor would the results be more dangerous to the peace of Europe if Austria were to be triumphant. What, then, has Germany to fear? What has Belgium? The best thing they can do is to remain neutral so long as the war is localized in Italy, and in the meantime to take a lesson from the lamentable breakdown of the boasted military system of Austria. The giant has collapsed at the bullet of a French rifle. Discipline, physical strength, the commissariat, the strategy, the transport—everything has failed in the hour of trial, excepting only the courage of the men, who have been marched up, famished, sleepless, and sun-stricken, to be shot down without a chance of even selling their lives dear. It now turns out to be not an immense army, or rather an immense crowd of raw lads, without training, without skill, without stamina. Such is the stuff of these huge German armaments, that make so great a show on paper, but vanish at the first crossing of bayonets or the first sound of the cannon. This is to play at armies. Let all the Powers of Europe, great and small, see that they have real armies, of real soldiers, who can endure a march as well as fight; and let them see that the rest of their system is adapted for the field as well as the parade, and then they need not be much concerned for the fate of an Italian campaign. As to ourselves, we need a fleet as well as an army, and it will be our own fault if we have not one equal to all that can be brought against us. For the general interests of the human race it were to be wished that Austria and France found better use for their men and money; but they are not rendering themselves more dangerous to the rest of Europe by destroying one another on the other side of the Alps.

The Revolution in Italy.

From the London Times, June 24.

The course of the war in Italy is introducing us to scenes of strange interest and traditions of extraordinary character. The able correspondent to whose communications we are indebted for a genuine history of this eventful expedition has now addressed us from those secluded districts of Northern Italy, where small communities have been nestling for ages on the spurs or in the valleys of the great Alpine chain. There, if anywhere, a true Italian spirit was to be looked for, and there it has been found. The incredible successes of Garibaldi and his band against strong divisions of disciplined troops are now explained. That active and daring partisan commands no motley troop of adventurers or outcasts. The "Chasseurs of the Alps" represent the volunteers of Italy—"rifle corps" fighting for their freedom. When we learn that a single town, of some 40,000 inhabitants, gave 3,000 willing and eager soldiers to Garibaldi's corps, we are no longer at a loss to comprehend that leader's victories. The truth is that he has been thrown into the very country best prepared for his reception and best calculated to provide him with what he needed. Whoever conceived the scheme, it was wisely planned. It has turned the patriotism of Italians to the best account, encouraged the spirit of nationality, inflicted constant annoyance on the Austrians, and furnished the main army of the Allies with omens and examples of triumph.

The plains of Lombardy, bounded on the south by the waters of the Po, are confined towards the north by the tremendous barrier of the Alps. At the foot of these mountains, in positions divided between hill and plain, lie many towns, more or less considerable, but all of great antiquity and of nearly uniform character. The population of the district, as was naturally to be anticipated under such conditions, is animated by strong national sentiments; and, even if the patriotism of the plains had been lukewarm, the spirit of freedom would have found an asylum here as it did in the Asturias, when Spain was occupied by the Moors. There are four chief classes among the people—the peasantry, who cultivate the corn-lands or the mulberry-holds; the townsmen, who carry on trade or manufacture; the nobility, and the priests. Of these, the latter only can be considered as actively inimical to the Allies. The nobles probably look with some distrust upon a popular movement, but they were never attached to Austria or treated with any deference by that Power. The priests however, are as hostile as they dare to be. Not only do they sympathize with Austria, the consistent enemy of civil and religious liberty, but they have been long alarmed by the policy of Sardinia and the turn given to ecclesiastical affairs in that kingdom. They have the will, therefore, to work strongly against the Allies, but they have not the power. The peasantry, for once, are either too timid or too patriotic to yield to their influence, and the townspeople, the dominant class, carry all before them. It was among these sympathizing and inflammable communities that Garibaldi was thrown, and the result was astonishing. At the first rumor of his approach every town rose in succession; the Austrians, fully comprehending their position, quickly withdrew, and in an instant the place was protected against their return by barricades and volunteers. Garibaldi had but to advance and occupy. With a consummate appreciation of his duty this intrepid chieftain pushed his enterprises to the very verge of temerity. Knowing that his audacity, under such circumstances, was his true policy, he declined no odds, however desperate, and soon found that the followers whom he lost by his daring were replaced by volunteers attracted by his renown. Altogether, what with the universal sympathy of the population, the natural advantages of the country, and the prestige now acquired by five weeks of victory, it is probable that Garibaldi commands as effective a division of troops as any in the Italian armies.

But there is another and a still more singular feature of the affair. We are told that these successive uprisings of civic communities have been accomplished with remarkable order; that the revolution which has transferred a whole district from the authority of a regular Government to the hands of an excited population has been completed without the least disturbance; and that the organization of society works as safely and as smoothly in Northern Lombardy as it did twelve months ago under an established rule. We ask for an explanation of this phenomenon, and we are referred—to the ancient Romans! The spirit which now supports and directs the Italians of the North is the very spirit bequeathed by old Rome, and preserved in all its vitality to this day. In all their provinces the Romans founded Municipalities; that is to say, they established in great towns complete and independent administrations after republican models; and so absolutely were such Governments adapted to the nature of things that the vicissitudes of fifty generations have not sufficed to destroy them. It was this old spirit of municipal liberty which rendered the South of France heretical in the Thirteenth Century and revolutionary in the Eighteenth, which made Toulouse a centre of civilization when Paris was still barbarous, and which connects the great expression of French Republicanism with the name of Marseilles. This same spirit now enables the towns of Northern Lombardy to accept the task of self government at a moment's notice, and to discharge it without failure. They reënter upon the duties of independent administration as if they had never resigned them, and as if not the Austrians, but the Romans themselves, had just quitted their walls. The phenomenon is one of the most striking that can be conceived. Even in external aspect some of the Italian towns correspond so precisely with the descriptions of Virgil that they can be almost thought unchanged since the days of the poet; but if we carry our imagination a little further, and reflect that within those ancient walls the very institutions of their founders or their conquerors survive in undiminished force and utility—that the corporations established in the times of the Scipios are perfectly effective in the times of Louis Napoleon—it will indeed tend to give us some adequate impression of Roman character and power.

We must not, however, conceal from ourselves that in this, as too probably in other respects, we have seen only the beginnings of the Italian expedition. Without disturbing the general disposition of the people or disparaging the influence of the towns, we cannot but remember that the conditions of the present crisis in Italy are calculated to create an exceptional and compulsory unanimity. We know, indeed that the Italians have been prepared for this beforehand. For some time past the duty and necessity of single-mindedness has been everywhere inculcated. Whatever discussions might arise hereafter, there was only one aim to be pursued at present, and that aim was the expulsion of the Austrians. Every object and every desire was to give place to this, and the sacrifice of feelings has been made. The Italians have united on these terms, and the union has been so far successful. Whether this accord will continue—whether Republicans, Federalists and Unionists will ultimately agree—whether the aspirations of one province can be reconciled with those of another—whether Sardinia and Italy can be satisfied together, time only can show. At present it is premature to speculate. The Italians are confronting a fearful danger and panting for a glorious consummation. In the face of these prospects, all minor differences are harmonized, and thence results the unanimity we see. The future must speak for itself. We trust the event may be favorable, for England desires nothing better than that Italy should be independent and prosperous; and perhaps, as the Italians have now at last taken one step towards union, we may accept the pledge as a proof of national wisdom.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Pending the reelection of those members of Parliament who had accepted office under Lord Palmerston nothing was being done in Parliament.

Lord Palmerston, in his address to his constituents, expresses the hope that the Ministry he has formed will prove satisfactory to the country. He says it will be one of the great objects of the Government to preserve for their country the blessings of peace, and to take advantage of any favorable opportunity that may present itself to exert the moral influence of Great Britain to assist in restoring peace to Europe. In regard to the Reform question, Lord Palmerston simply says that he trusts his Government may be able so to deal with the subject as to strengthen the institutions of the country by placing them on a broader and firmer foundation.

The London Herald emphatically denies that Lord Derby has stated he would never again accept office.

A report was current that Mr. Gladstone, the new Chancellor of the Exchequer, had determined to retrench largely on the naval expenditure, and the Times and other journals protested against any diminution in the extraordinary efforts for defence which were in progress in the naval department. Lord Brougham had also given notice in the House of Lords of his intention to inquire as to the truth of the report.

The Rt. Hon. Maziere Brady is the new Lord Chancellor for Ireland.

The London Times, in reply to an article in the Journal des Debats, calling attention to the operations of England on the Island of Perim, asserts that Perim is an isolated rock utterly incapable of exercising any power over the passage of the sea in which it lies, and that no steps whatever have been taken to fortify it.

At a meeting in London of the Parliamentary Reform Committee, the following resolution was unanimously agreed to:

"That this Committee, believing that they have reason to complain of the inadequate representation of the independent Liberals in the Cabinet, await with anxiety the fulfillment of Lord John Russell's promise of an early introduction of a substantial measure of Parliamentary Reform, and are of opinion that the support of the independent Liberals both within and without the House of Commons, should depend upon the character of the measures submitted by the new administration."

The King of the Belgians arrived in London on the 22d ult. Rumor invested his visit with some political significance at this particular juncture, but it was asserted on the other hand that it was merely one of those friendly visits which he periodically pays to Queen Victoria.

Latest.

Mr. Gladstone denies the report that he seeks to reduce the defences of the country, and says the estimates for the year which he is preparing will afford the most complete satisfaction on that point.

The Handel commemoration at the Crystal Palace proved a great success. On the last day (Friday) there were nearly 27,000 persons present, including Prince Albert and several of the Royal children.

The London Times in its City Article publishes some severe strictures upon the mail contract concluded between the Derby Government and Mr. Lever, as the representative of the Galway line of steamers. Lord Colchester, the Postmaster-General, strongly protested against the contract being entered into, and the Times contends that both the nature of the measure and the style in which it was carried out stand open to unmitigated reprobation. It likewise says that "anything more humiliating from its inconsequential folly, or more disagreeable from its example, has not been witnessed within recent experience."

The Cunard Company had contracted with the Messrs. Napiers and the Messrs. Thomson, of Glasgow, for the immediate construction of several large first-class steamers, to replace those recently sold to the Spanish Government.

The Paris Bourse had further declined, but on the 24th there was rather more firmness. The Three per Cents finally closed flat at 61.90 for money and 62.75 account.

THE PAPAL STATES.

A dispatch from Turin says that the Swiss regiments previously reported to have left Rome had attacked Perugia. Great resistance was made, notwithstanding the defenders were few. After three hours' fighting outside the town, the Swiss entered, and the combat continued for two hours in the streets. The Swiss trampled down and killed every woman and defenceless person. The next day the outrages, arrests and firing on the people recommenced. The town was in a state of siege.

The latest advices from Rome state that on the 21st a crowd assembled before the French garrison and were about to display the tricolor flag and to proclaim the dictatorship of Victor Emanuel, but General Goyon prevented it. Strong patrols traversed the town. The Pope has notified his protest against the dismemberment of his States to the Powers represented at the Paris Conferences. At Gaeta the Pope addressed the Consistory on the separation of Romagna from the States of the Church. His Holiness communicated to the Cardinals a letter of the Emperor Napoleon, guaranteeing the independence of the Papal States.

LONDON MONEY MARKET.

The Bank of England had made no alteration in its rate of discount, although there had been some expectation of a further reduction.

There was a good demand for Money in the open discount market at 2⅝@2¾ ₱ cent. for the best bills.

The funds had been slightly depressed, owing chiefly to the military action of Prussia, and Consols closed on the 24th at 92¾@92¾ for account, ex dividend. There was rather more firmness at the close.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Asia, which sailed from Liverpool June 25, brings us full and interesting accounts of the movements of the armies in Italy, and of political events on the Continent to that date. After a series of rapid retreats the Austrian army, numbering more than a quarter of a million of men, appears to have made a stand on the right bank of the Mincio, between Castiglione and the river, and was there defeated by Napoleon III., after a conflict of sixteen hours' duration, on the 24th of June. At the same time important movements were making on the Adriatic by the French fleet, and by the force under Prince Napoleon from the South, while there were reasons for suspecting a widely concerted rising in the Italian Tyrol. The Papal Government appears to have been guilty of great folly or baseness in respect to the people of the Romagna. The Swiss hireling soldiery of the Pope had been despatched to Perugia to murder the inhabitants in the name of the Head of the Church. Grave complications were expected to arise from this infamous conduct of the Conclave. At Naples the course of the young King was exciting much uneasiness and distrust. The Prussian Government is endeavoring to explain the mobilization of the army as a purely pacific step; and to deprecate the idea of assuming any extraordinary claims as a mediator in Europe. A foolish story circulated by the Independance Belge of terms proposed to the French Emperor, obtained little credence. In England the alarm-fever was subsiding and signs of dissension were appearing in the new Government. Mr. Gladstone was to be seriously opposed at Oxford by Lord Chandos. A quizzical article on the Isle of Perim, in the Journal des Débats, had greatly exercised the English Press; and the King of the Belgians having visited London is publicly requested by the London Times to remember that he owes his throne to a violation of the treaties of 1815; and therefore not to make himself specially active at the English Court in sustaining the impossible pretensions of Austria in Italy.

We have advices from California to the 20th ult., and from Mexico to the 3d inst., by the arrival at New-Orleans of the steamer W. H. Webb from Minatitlan. She brings intelligence that $2,000,000 in treasure were on the 20th ult. shipped for the East at San Francisco. Business was improving somewhat. Mr. Curry had been nominated for Governor by the Anti-Lecompton Democrats, who had also nominated Messrs. McKibben and Booker for Congress. From Mexico there is no political news. It is announced that Gen. Robles, at the request of Minister McLane, had released the $5,000,000 conducta, and that it was awaiting shipment at Vera Cruz.

The corner stone of the State Agricultural College, at Ovid, was laid yesterday with appropriate ceremonies, by ex-Gov. King, in the presence of a great concourse of people. The report of the Trustees state that $40,000 have been subscribed towards the Institution by the citizens of Ovid and vicinity. A like sum is also appropriated by the State. The building will be ready for the accommodation of one hundred and fifty pupils next Spring.

The Detroit Advertiser states that the wheat crop in Michigan will be abundant, notwithstanding the frosts, and that the reports of excessive damage which were first circulated were unduly exaggerated. The frost was confined to a section comparatively small, and the fears of the timid led to the spread of unfounded rumors.

The Oberlin rescuers in jail at Cleveland, have started a newspaper, called The Rescuer, in which they set forth the facts of their imprisonment, and appeal to the sympathy of the public.

Troubles have arisen at Dartmouth College between the President and four members of the Senior Class. The cause of the difficulty is stated to have been the unauthorized absence of the students of the College. The rebellious parties will leave the institution.

The Military Commission appointed by the Governor of New-Jersey to revise the Militia Laws of the State, met at Trenton on Wednesday, and after effecting an organization, adjourned to meet again on the 19th July.

The mutineer Plumer, on receiving the news of the commutation of his sentence, issued a card of thanks, expressing his gratitude to the President and to the editors of public journals and others who espoused his cause.

The Board of Aldermen, last evening, concurred with the Board of Councilmen in directing the Croton Aqueduct Department to erect fifty drinking hydrants in the most public streets and places of the City, one-half of them to be similar to that in Union-square, and the rest of such form and construction as the officers of the Department see fit. The report of the Committee on Streets in favor of paving Hudson-street, from Canal-street to Eighth-avenue, with Belgian pavement, was adopted. Considerable routine business was transacted, and the Board adjourned to Monday.

The Board of Councilmen had no quorum last evening, but six members being present at the calling of the roll.

The Tammany General Committee last evening adopted a resolution expressing their disapproval of the reported attempts to induce the United States Government to contract with private parties for the receipt, storage and delivery of goods sent to the public store, thereby throwing many persons employed for the purpose out of employment. A Committee was appointed to draft resolutions condemning the spirit of the letter of Gen. Cass with regard to the rights of naturalized citizens abroad. The Committee will report next Tuesday evening.

The Mozart-place Democratic General Committee held their regular monthly meeting last evening. There was a large attendance. Resolutions were adopted recommending that the next State Convention should confine its labors solely to the nomination of a State ticket, and favoring the choosing delegates to the Charleston Convention by Congressional Districts. They also assert their intention to run candidates wholly independent of "St. Tammany."

The steamer State of Maine while on her trip to Fall River, on Wednesday evening, broke the cross-head of her engine when off Huntington. Her passengers were transferred to the Vanderbilt and sent forward, the State of Maine returning to the City. A new cross-head will be supplied, and she will resume her place on the line immediately.

Several cases were disposed of yesterday in the Court of General Sessions, but few of which, however, were of importance. William Evans alias Jones, a well-known culprit, pleaded guilty to forgery in the second degree, being charged with passing three counterfeit bills on the New-England Bank of Boston, at successive times, knowing them to be fraudulent. He was sentenced to the State Prison for six years. William Williams pleaded guilty to burglary in the third degree, and was sent to the State Prison for three years. Franz Heibert, convicted of grand larceny, was sentenced to the State Prison for four years. The remainder of the sentences were for minor offences.

The sales of Cotton, yesterday, comprised 1,500 bales, at unchanged rates. The transactions in Flour were less extensive, yet indicative of a very firm market. A livelier inquiry prevailed for Wheat and Corn—the latter at higher figures. Provisions, Naval Stores, Oils, Coffee, Molasses, Rice, Teas, Hides, Leather, Hops, and Seeds, were quiet. The sales of Sugars reached 3,231 hhds., chiefly Cubs, and 420 boxes Havana. Prices favored sellers. The freight engagements were rather heavier.

The Great Battle Before the Mincio.

As we suggested, on receiving the confused and blundering telegrams of the news by the Adelaide, the point from which the Emperor Napoleon's dispatch of the 24th of June was dated proves, on the arrival of the Asia, to have been not Candia but Cavriana; and the glorious action, therefore, of which it speaks, must have been fought for the control of the right bank of the Mincio. The language of the Emperor Napoleon clearly indicates the success of the allied arms, and a demoralizing failure on the part of the Austrians to hold the splendid positions by which, on that bank of the Mincio, the approaches to Peschiera on the north, and to Mantua on the south, of the famous quadrilateral defence, are covered. The battle-field of the 24th of June, although necessarily far more extensive in its scope, must have embraced all the leading points made memorable half a century ago by the fierce conflicts between the French under Bonaparte and Augereau, and the Austro-Sardinians under Wurmser and Alvinzi at Castiglione and Lonato. In June, 1859, as in August, 1796, the Austrians must have undertaken to arrest their enemy's passage across the Mincio by occupying the high ground, which, rising a mile or two west of Peschiera, runs in broken and formidable lines past the town of Volta, and completely commands the roads that lead to the river at Valeggio and at Goito. If this intention entered into that new plan of campaign with which, as the Austrian journals at London and Vienna have assured us, the Emperor Francis Joseph came hasting into Italy at the beginning of June, it is not easy to understand why the Austrian forces should have allowed themselves to be driven so easily by Garibaldi's corps from their formidable lines at Castenedolo on the 14th of June, and still less easy to see why they should have abandoned all their entrenchments at Monte Chiaro, Lonato and Castiglione without a struggle, and should have chosen to make their stand on the last range of hills immediately before reaching the river, with the certainty, in case of defeat, of being driven in confusion upon their posts of the Mincio, and exposed to attack there at a great disadvantage.

If, on the other hand, the almost ignominious speed of the Austrian flight from the Adda could not carry them over the Mincio before they were overtaken by the pursuit of the Allies, then the march of Napoleon upon the Mincio must have been conducted with an ability even more consummate than was displayed in the magnificent movement from Alessandria upon Milan.

From Desenzano, on the Lago di Garda, a cluster of hills climbs steadily southward and upward to Castiglione; thence turning eastward, the highlands run in spurs on a south-eastern line by Solferino, Cavriana, Volta and Ceretta to the very bank of the Mincio. The village of Cavriana lies quite high among these hills, and, with the hamlet of Compagnolo, overtops that direct road to the Mincio, at Valleggio, along which Gen. Bonaparte forced his way May 29, 1796. The position also commands the roads which lead northeastward to the Mincio at Monzambano, and in a still more northerly direction to Peschiera, distant a little less than nine miles from Cavriana. To the south this position gives those who hold it, by Volta and Ceretta, control of the Cerlongo road to Goito, three leagues from Mantua. Apart, therefore, from the immensely discouraging effect of a great and crushing blow inflicted in circumstances which, however we may interpret them, reflect no credit upon their generalship, the Austrians have lost in one action on the right bank of the Mincio the very keys of their quadrilateral stronghold. The intelligence of their next movements under this tremendous pressure, will be looked for with the deepest interest. If all be true of the allied artillery that has been claimed for it, or whispered of its efficiency, the position of the Austrian army on the 25th was more than discouraging; it was desperate.

Heraldic Geography.—Heraldic Zoology, as all the world knows, is a very quaint and licentious science, paying small reverence to genera and species, and making a mock of all laws, alike of form and color. Its categories are not to be disturbed by double-headed eagles, scarlet lions, pea-green human savages or three-tailed snakes. All is fish that comes to its net; and for the matter of that, flesh as well as fowl. It is Catholic and omnivorous.

To this strange mystery of intelligence must now be added a sister department of Heraldic Geography. The credit of this addition to the resources of mankind belongs to the New-York Herald. This journal opened the war in Italy with a profession of its faith in geography, and announced its intention of mastering that branch of learning. It has kept its word. It has, in fact, created a new geography of its own. To the discovery of Plum-Gut in the history of navigation, and to that of Potosi Lead in the history of mineralogy, must now be added, in the history of war and topography, the invention of a new pathway leading from Paris through the kingdom of Hanover directly to the Rhine. The Herald is well assured that, by marching from Paris through Hanover to the Rhine, the Emperor Napoleon will greatly disturb the peace of Europe, and bring many strange things to pass. There can be no doubt of it. Such a movement on the part of the French sovereign would produce in Europe such a sensation as would only be paralleled in America by an irruption of the Utah Mormons upon the river-country of the Mississippi through the State of Ohio.

The Position of Germany.

The commercial classes of Europe are hanging with not unnatural anxiety upon every word that falls from the lips of the Prince-Regent of Prussia. What course the great Protestant Power of Germany really means to pursue; whether it is her intention to maintain her own honor, and the true interests of Germany, and the tranquillity of the world, by withholding her support from the frantic little crusaders of Bavaria and Wurtemburg; or whether she is really bent upon sacrificing her own rank as an independent State, and upon ruining the hopes of German progress, and upon risking the reversion of all Rhenish Germany to the sway of France by deliberately marshalling her intelligent armies in the rear of the hordes of a Gyulai and a d'Urban, and deliberately prostituting the German sword to the service of the House of Hapsburg; these are the questions which now hold the foremost place in the minds of all thinking men whose material interests are likely to be compromised for good or ill by the extension which the present war in Europe may eventually take. Up to the present moment the war in Italy has been waged without really embarrassing in any grave degree the serious commercial concerns of the world. War in modern times is neither as fierce on the field nor as fatal in the economy of nations as it was in ruder days, when humanity and industry alike were less developed than they are now. War, as it is now conducted in Italy, leaves the activities of neutral nations even a larger scope than ever. So long as France is called upon to make head against Austria alone this will continue to be the case. But a combined assault of the German Confederation upon France would profoundly alter all this, and profoundly for the worse. It is quite possible, and indeed probable, that England might remain neutral in such a conflict; nor is it by any means certain that Russia would take any active part in it. The power of France, roused by an attack so unjustifiable and so outrageous, would approve itself terrible enough to the enthusiasts of the Rhine to excuse the Emperor Napoleon from seeking any alliances by which his freedom of action after victory might be compromised anew. A single-handed conflict, however, between Germany and France would work incalculable mischief to Europe and mankind. Upon Germany, in especial, it would bring down the severest weight of taxation and trial to which that patient nation has ever been subjected. It would strengthen throughout Germany the aristocratic at the expense of the municipal and independent principle. It would interrupt hundreds of new and flourishing enterprises, upon which commercial Germany has but recently entered. In a word, it would be an act of madness on the part of Germany; while on the part of France it would so plainly be a case of self-defence against insane aggression, that the public opinion of the world would hold France excused for almost any steps she might think it necessary to take towards restraining a neighbor so blind, so obstinate and so dangerous.

Are we, then, to anticipate the outbreak of such a conflict?

The mere mobilization of the Prussian army, as we have already shown, does not necessarily mean either the actual imminence or even the probable approach of such a war. It may be explained, and has been, on the simple ground that the Prussian Government does not wish to seem incapable of armed action in the presence of the threatening attitude of the Czar and of the angry tumult of the lesser German States. As the London Times has already taken pains to say, it will not be readily interpreted by Europe to mean that Prussia thinks herself called upon to interfere where England and Russia stand neutral; or warranted in attacking France because a knot of German egotists fancy the slavery of the Italians necessary to their own safety.

The days when such a policy as this could be safely followed have long since gone by. If the German princes think otherwise, Prussia, it is to be hoped for her own sake, will not be deluded into paying the costs of their education to sounder views. That the German people have begun to take some heed to the ways into which these petty rulers of theirs were leading them, already appears in slight indications cropping out all over the country. In Bavaria, for instance, the very hot-bed of Jesuitical Teutonism, a Government loan of 10,000,000 florins, for the expenses of "the war," has utterly failed; only about 300,000 florins, or one thirty-third part of the whole sum having been subscribed by the people. The Hamburg journals at the other extremity of Germany, speaking for the great mercantile interests of the Teutonic races, openly denounce the mobilization of the Prussian army as a "false measure," and as "endangering the position of Prussia" for the defence of those "Austrian possessions in Italy, protected by the line of the Mincio, which are not a guarantee, but a permanent danger for Europe."

Should Austria succeed in dragging Prussia at her chariot-wheels, it will be but to share her own fate, and we do not as yet see any sufficient reason for supposing the Prussian rulers blind to this formidable fact.

Another Old Whig Song.—The latest contribution to Mr. Hiram Ketchum's Museum of Whig Literature is from the pen of the Hon. W. C. Rives, of Virginia. It will be found in another part of this morning's Times. Mr. Rives writes clearly, which is well, and briefly, which is better, and refers those who may desire to know his views more in detail, to a previous exposition of them which he has recently made. He is, as a matter of course, opposed to the Slavery agitation, and recommends that public attention should be turned to "questions of a more general and pervading character." Such, for example, as the "great end of binding together in fraternal union the various sections of the Republic."

If, however, we may judge of the interest which public questions excite by the manner of their discussion, it would, we think, be difficult for Mr. Rives to point out one of a more "pervading character" than this topic which he advises his countrymen to drop. Not only at the North, but in his own section of the Union, is Slavery in some of its aspects the theme of constant and eager remark. If he can persuade the people to let it alone in the future, he will prove himself a very potent political conjuror.

When he says that Slavery has no proper connection with national politics, he expresses what might be theoretically true if it did not unfortunately happen to be practically false. But so long as extremists seek, on the one hand, to extend the domain, and on the other, to trespass upon the "constitutional guarantees" of Slavery, it is futile to talk of keeping the question out of national politics. Mr. Rives and his old Whig brethren may dream of such a millenium, but they will never live to see it.

Stated Preaching in Hot Weather.

Some of our cotemporaries in the rural districts are expending a good deal of sympathy upon our religious destitution during hot weather, and this upon the assumption that during the dog-days we have little or no preaching. They are led to this conclusion by observing, firstly, that to a very large extent the village pulpits at midsummer are occupied by City clergymen; and, secondly, that the metropolitan journals, every few days during the month of July, reproduce an item, with only a change of names, to the effect that "next month the Rev. Mr. Unction's fine church on High-street will be closed until the return of its fashionable congregation from summering." Very naturally our cotemporaries rush to the conclusion that while the dog-star rages the church-going bell gets choked with cobwebs, and that church-going people, if they insist upon having service, meet in each other's parlors, or, if their numbers are still too large, turn into a district school-house, and invite the ministrations of some traveling dominie from one of the hotels.

But our sympathizing friends should know that in the Counties of New-York and Kings which go to make up the Metropolis, we have some 420 churches, seating comfortably 355,000 people, the pastors of which churches well earn their aggregate salaries of $620,000, by preaching to a usual attendance during Spring and Fall, of some 325,000 souls. Now, if they will consider how all the rural districts swarm, during August, with church-goers from the City, and what showers of bank bills fall upon the contribution plates from these transient worshipers, and go to swell the provincial reputation for benevolence, they will not fail to conclude that some of the churches in town might without detriment to the morals of the masses that remain behind be closed temporarily. Then when a church is closed, it is an item of news to be chronicled in all the papers, while of the hundreds that remain open nothing need be said; just as the one man who commits a murder finds his name in print, while the respectable majority who omit their murder go about unreported. The truth is that the numbers of City churches closed in the Summer grows yearly less, while in the case of those that are really vacated, the lecture-rooms are generally kept open, and divine services continued throughout the season, though seldom by the pastor. He, being human, must needs have his vacation, and wisely takes it when his people do, though he is not always wise enough to leave his sermons at home when he goes, and forego preaching until he comes back to his own pulpit. The City chimes ring as merrily, and the City bells as universally, every Sunday morning in August as in January, and the free seats in our churches are more plenty in Summer than in Winter. So our weeping rural friends may dry their eyes, and postpone sending around the hat for means to furnish us with a dog-day missionary, at least for the present. Not a day passes that in some parts of the City they do not shut off the gas and croton for repairs to the pipes, but for all that we do not sit in utter darkness after nightfall, nor go about pining with thirst and mummied with dust the long Summer through.

Another Mexican Mystery.—Decidedly Mexico is the land of marvels. Its politics are not so stupendous as those of Europe, but they are quite as startling. It was but the other day that an Ex-Envoy of Mexico at Washington, Gen. Robles, stopped a convoy of specie on the highway, and "conveyed away" five millions of dollars. This feat, considering its lively irregularity, has hardly been paralleled since the English Commodore Moore, a hundred years ago, committed a like piracy on the high seas, with English men-of-war, upon a Spanish plate-fleet, in time of peace. Brilliant as it was, it has been outdone by our own Minister, Mr. McLane, who has induced General Robles to give the said five millions back to their owners. This, at least, is the story of the telegraph. How, by what legerdemain, diplomatic or moral suasion, Mr. McLane achieved this wonder, we wait with impatience to hear. It certainly, however, stands alone in history. After accomplishing it there is nothing Mr. McLane may not undertake, even to the amalgamation of the Democratic factions, and the pacification of the Charleston Convention.

A Death in Brooklyn from Yellow Fever.—On the 29th of June the brig John Boynton from Port-au-Prince, arrived at this port with a cargo of coffee and logwood. According to the Health Officer's report to the Board of Health, the Captain had been several days ill with bilious fever, and one of the crew was down "with a fever of doubtful character." Under the stringent Quarantine regulations of preceding years the brig would have been sent to the lower anchorage, and the sick on board taken to the Marine Hospital. But by the different policy now prevailing, the captain was permitted to go at once to his house in Brooklyn, where yesterday, according to Health-Officer Boyd, he died of well-marked yellow fever.

We are not informed whether, on permitting him to go up from the brig to his home, care was taken to leave his infected clothing behind him; but probably, as Dr. Gunn pronounced it bilious fever, no such precaution was taken. It is not at all probable, considering the cleanly condition of comparatively Brooklyn, and the moderate, wholesome weather that the disease will be reproduced there from this case as a centre. If the clothing which the sick man bore had been burned on board the brig, according to the doctrine of the National Quarantine Convention, his own removal to his home could do no more damage than if he had been truly suffering from bilious fever. But while unable to affirm that this precaution was taken, we cannot hold the National Conventionists to the responsibility in the event of any mischief growing out of this case. On the other hand, if the strict Contagionists—of whom, in their purity, the venerable Dr. Francis seems to be about the only survivor—hold the right doctrine, those who have been in attendance upon the late Captain of the John Boynton have rendered themselves as liable to take the yellow fever as the unvaccinated and uninnoculated attendants upon a small-pox patient would have done to take the small-pox. But the fact that probably not five physicians in the two cities would admit that the attendants have assumed any such risks, is evidence enough that a very great change has taken place in the public sentiment upon the contagiousness of this disease, against which we have been so stringently maintaining our quarantine barriers.

One thing must be frankly confessed, however; if yellow fever is not personally contagious, panic is. And if any man is foolish enough to surrender to his ignorant fears, to make up his mind that he must die because a dying man in his vicinity had the black vomit, and to pack off his family into the country in deadly fright, there is no assurance in any of the books or in the proceedings of any Sanitary Conventions that he will not perish miserably, a victim of his own unmanly cowardice, and infect whole regions with a fatal panic, that are as pure in their air, and innocuous, as are the Catskill Heights in June.

NEWS BY TEL[redacted]H.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Our Government and the Rights of Neutrals—Retrenchment in the Treasury Department—Condition of the Treasury—The Next Presidency.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

Washington, Thursday, July 7.

I have before mentioned the fact that our Government demanded the right to participate in all the benefits resulting from the Paris Conference; but the assent of some of the parties being withheld, Mr. Cass has addressed a circular to our Ministers asserting a claim to all neutral rights recognized by the Paris Conference, and emphatically denying the right of any European Government to lay down one principle of action for one nation, and a different principle for another. Mr. Cass says that the European Powers have no right to sell or to use as premiums or bribes, great national rights, and that the United States will maintain at every hazard the principle that neutral flags protect the enemy's goods, one of the principles recognized by the Paris Conference, and the only one in which our Government now feels particularly interested. In the same paper it is asserted that we shall never yield on the privateering question. This circular was forwarded by the last steamer to all our Diplomatic representatives in Europe.

The experiments at the Navy-yard with the breech-loading guns were closed yesterday. No report is yet made.

Gen. Jesup will return to his post on the 10th, and Secretary Floyd on the 15th inst. Q.

[From the Reporter for the Associated Press.]

Washington, Thursday, July 7.

It is estimated that a reduction of from $200,000 to $300,000 will be effected during the fiscal year just commenced, by the retrenchment in the expenses attending the collection of the customs revenue, now in progress. These will continue to be made from time to time, as reliable information on the subject shall reach the Secretary.

A number of gentlemen from different parts of the Union are making arrangements for an early private meeting at Washington, to consult as to the best means of bringing Gen. Lane, of Oregon, prominently before the country as a candidate for the Presidency.

The President continues to assure his friends that he will not be a candidate for reelection.

The Secretary of the Treasury, on appeal, has decided that the following-named articles are properly chargeable with nineteen per centum duty: Silk, violin strings, Italian cloths, as a manufacture of worsted used for garments and linings; button stuff, not being cut into slips or patterns of requisite size and shape for shoes and bootees. Veneers, no other instrument than a saw having been used in their construction, and requiring still to undergo other process before they can be applied to purposes of veneering, are free, from Canada, under the reciprocity treaty.

The receipts into the Treasury for the week ending with June amounted to $2,633,000. The drafts paid amounted to nearly three millions, and the drafts issued to above two millions. The balance in the Treasury was $4,438 000.

Commander Farrand, Lieut. Kell, and Master John Pearson have been ordered to the Warrington Navy-yard, Florida.

Lieut. Armstrong has been ordered to the command of the steamer Sumpter.

Lieut. Doty and Assistant-Surgeon Webber have been ordered to the sloop-of-war Wyoming.

Surgeon Mayo has been ordered to the receiving ship at New-York.

Passed Assistant Surgeon —— has been ordered to the Laboratory, New-York.

The New-Orleans Picayune of Friday last, says that the wrecked schooner lying near Ship Island Shoals, is believed, on competent authority, to be the Sarah Bartlett, which, three months ago, left Charleston for Boston with a cargo of cotton, sugar, and molasses. The vessel lies capsized, and it is thought all on board were lost.

Brevet Major Ridgeley, of the Fourth Artillery of the Army, died last night at Georgetown.

Later from the Kansas Gold Region.

Leavenworth, K. T., Thursday, July 7.

The express from Denver City has arrived here, bringing dates of the 30th ult. The accounts from the gold region continue flattering. The Indians were very troublesome, and an expedition to chastise them was talked of.

Mr. McCoy, who left Denver City on the 24th ult., informs the St. Joseph Gazette that only eight or ten claims have been discovered that pay. These are on the Gregory Road, the rest being all a desert. He says the reports of the richness of other claims are absolutely false, and that the miners were leaving in large numbers. Some three thousand wagons are now on a return trip. Mr. McCoy estimates that there are now about the mines from 25,000 to 30,000 persons, most of whom are doing nothing, or working for their board. He says the mines will not support more than 5,000 people, and advises everybody to stay at home.

One hundred and thirty-six troops from Carlisle Barracks arrived here to-day, en route to Santa Fé.

Hon. W. C. Rives on the Slavery Question.

Castle Hill, Va., Wednesday, June 29, 1859.

My Dear Sir: I have received, within a day or two past, your letter dated the 10th instant, in which you do me the honor to request my views on the subject of a resolution under consideration of the Whig General Committee of the City of New-York, deprecating the further agitation of the Slavery Question in our National politics, and affirming the propriety and expediency of turning the public attention to questions of a more general and pervading character, with reference, especially, to the great end of "binding together by the ties of interest and fraternal affection the various parts and sections of our widely-extended Republic."

To the wise and patriotic object of this resolution I most heartily subscribe. The subject of domestic Slavery has no proper connection with our National politics. Its general regulation is admitted by all to be exclusively within the domain of State laws and State Constitutions. The few questions with regard to it, that can come within the province of the General Government, are settled, once for all, by the Constitution of the United States, and have received a practical solution in the natural course of events, which leaves no longer any motive of interest or duty, either to the non-slaveholding or the slaveholding States for their continued agitation.

Every dictate, on the contrary, of wisdom and patriotism demands that a contention, fraught with so much peril to the existence of the Union itself, as well as threatening dangerous reactionary consequences to the parties and interests concerned in it, whether at the North or the South, should cease, and give place to the calm consideration of other and more legitimate and urgent questions, on which the political freedom and happiness of the whole country depend. These vital national questions can be brought to a safe and happy issue only by the cordial coöperation of patriotic men in every section of the Confederacy—a coöperation hopeless, as all must see, while an internecine controversy is waging on a sensitive and peculiarly exciting question, of which the necessary effect, if not the purpose, is to array section against section in habitual and unrelenting strife.

Having recently had occasion to declare my views very fully on the subject of your communication, before an assemblage of my fellow-citizens at home, I beg leave to send you herewith a copy of the remarks then made by me; to which permit me to add, with the expression of my entire and cordial sympathy in the spirit which dictated the resolution depending before your Committee, my ardent wishes for the prevalence of those wise counsels of harmony and conciliation it inculcates, in the great interest of the national union, liberty and progress.

Accept, I pray you, the sentiments of esteem and respect with which I am very truly and faithfully,

Yours, W. C. RIVES.

Hiram Ketchum, Esq., Chairman of the Whig General Committee of the City of New-York.

MILITARY NEWS.

Seventy-first Regiment—Military Trouble at Albany—Trial of Rifled Cannon.

The Adjutant-General of New-York has issued an order for the incorporation of a new Company into the Seventy-first Regiment. Seymour A. Bush is named Captain, and James G. Platt as First Lieutenant. The new organization will be known as Company I.

The Albany Argus says a military difficulty has occurred in that city:

"It was generally noticed and much regretted that Company B—one of the most popular military companies—was not in the procession on the Fourth. Because of the determination to have two processions—one composed mainly of Firemen, and the other made up of the two Regiments—both sides were anxious to turn out in all their strength. Every company attached to the Regiments were ordered to parade, but Capt. Ainsworth, of Company B, desired to avoid it, hoping thereby to keep his command aloof from the difficulty that existed between the military and firemen. He, therefore, sent a messenger to General Frisby, requesting that himself and company might be excused from parading. The messenger returned with an answer, that the General granted the request. However, it was made known, subsequently, that General F. had understood the request to be to excuse Captain A. only, and not the company, and he fully expected to find it in line, under the Lieutenant. What the result will be is left to conjecture. It is rumored that the General looks upon the affair as an inexcusable disobedience of orders, and that the Captain may be court-martialed—possibly the company disbanded."

The report of the Board of Army Officers appointed to test Gen. James' new rifled cannon, has been forwarded to the War Department. The experiments were made at Chicopee, Mass., where the cannon was cast. The Board convened June 7, and continued their experiments for several days. The guns examined were a six-pound bronze cannon, with 3 80 inch calibre, and rifled fifteen grooves; a twelve pounder, four inch calibre and same number of grooves. In both instances, the twist in rifling was equivalent to one turn in sixty feet at the beginning, and ending in one in twenty.

The projectile designed by Gen. James for these guns, is a cast iron cylinder pointed by a solid conoid head,—the diameter being only .02 of an inch less than the bore of the gun, and the length twice the diameter of the calibre. The cylinder retains its full diameter for a quarter of an inch or its length at each end. For the intermediate length its diameter is reduced half an inch, forming a recess in its body, which is filled by a compound of canvas, sheet-tin, and lead. The base of the cylinder has a central cavity or opening of 1.95 inches in diameter, and 1.5 inches deep. When the charge is fired, the gas evolved by the burning of the powder, in its efforts to expel the projectile and to escape from the gun, is forced into the cavity against the compound filling, which is thereby pressed into the grooves of the bore, and by its firm hold in them, the rotary motion is imparted to the projectile.

The report says, "respecting the guns, their merit is due to the rifling, which can be readily applied, at little cost, to all bronzed cannon of the United States, and so renders them as far superior to the present smooth bore guns, as in small arms, the most improved rifle surpasses the musket."

Another series of experiments is in contemplation, in which to compare, side by side, the performances of this new gun with those now in use.

The Military Commission appointed by Gov. Newell of New-Jersey, to revise the Militia System of the State, assembled in the Senate Chamber at Trenton on Wednesday, 6th. Brig.-Gen. Runyon presided. After organizing, the Commission adjourned to the 19th July.

OUR CALIFORNIA CORRESPONDENCE.

Political Intelligence—The Republican State Nominations—Indictment of City Attorney Tracy—Col. Fremont—Accidents and Incidents.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, June 10, 1859.

The Republican State Convention of California met at Sacramento City on Wednesday, and adjourned sine die yesterday. The delegates were divided in sentiment as to the propriety of nominating a straight-out ticket, a portion of them being in favor of some arrangement for a fusion with the Anti-Lecompton Democrats, who, under the lead of Senator BRODERICK, are organizing with a good deal of spirit for the next Fall's campaign. A decided majority, however, were of opinion that fusion is not desirable at present. The Convention adopted resolutions against the introduction of Slavery into Territory now free; repudiating the modern dogma that Slavery exists in the Territories by force of the Constitution, and viewing it as the entering wedge for the enslavement of the Free States; against the proposed Slave-code for the Territories; denouncing the corruptions and errors of the National Administration; in favor of the Pacific Railroad, and declaring that the Republican Party only can be relied upon as the earnest friends of the measure; in favor of encouragement to the St. Joseph, Salt Lake and Placerville Overland Mail Route equal to that afforded the Butterfield route; in favor of a Homestead law, giving a home, free of cost, to every landless man who will occupy it; in favor of GROW's bill withholding Government lands from public sale until they shall have been open to preëmption for ten years; and in opposition to any unjust discrimination against foreigners, in the matter of the elective franchise.

The following State ticket was nominated: For Governor, LELAND STANFORD, of Sacramento; Lieutenant Governor, J. F KENNEDY, of Santa Clara; Judge of Supreme Court, O. L. Shafter, of San Francisco, (formerly of Vermont); Clerk of Supreme Court, S. D. Parker, of Trinity; Treasurer, Philip P. Carne, of Butte; Comptroller, J. R. Clark, of El Dorado; Superintendent of Public Instruction, S. W. Brown, of Sonoma; Surveyor-General. H. S. Love, of San Francisco: for Congress, P. H. Sibley, of Placer, and Col. E. D. Baker, of San Francisco.

This ticket, at present, has about as much chance of being elected as BUCHANAN has of a second term—but it is understood that the State Central Committee may, if they think proper, make some arrangement—in the progress of the canvass—with the Anti-Lecompton Democrats, for a fusion. Possibly such an arrangement will result in the election of a portion of the foregoing candidates; but these chances are remote. The Convention, in selecting the Central Committee, had the good sense to leave out altogether F. P. TRACY, its present President, and the City Attorney of San Francisco, whose tergiversations and short-comings have been so disastrously overhauled at the hands of the Bulletin.

The regular Administration Democrats hold their State Convention in a few days. Of the delegates elected, so far as heard from, six only can be relied upon to vote for the renomination of Mr. WELLER for Governor; fourteen are definitely pledged to the Hon M. S. LATHAM, sixteen are claimed for NUGENT, five for DENVER, and forty-nine are set down as doubtful. Of the latter, a majority I believe will be found in favor of LATHAM; and the Nugent men will be pretty sure to go in the same direction, after casting a complimentary vote or two for their nominal preference.

A charter election was held at Placerville on Monday last, which resulted in the success of the Anti-Lecompton ticket by large majorities. G. W. SWAN was chosen Mayor; Alexander Hunter, Marshal; C. W. Turman, Collector; John Rush, Recorder, and C. W. Mountjoy, Assessor. The reduction in the Overland Mail service terminating at Placerville, has doubtless specially embittered the people of that town against the Administration.

The indictment of City Attorney F. P. TRACY and Supervisor GATES has "stirred up the animals" not a little. The Supervisors have passed a special preamble and resolution exculpating themselves from the accidental charge of carelessness made against them by the Grand Jury, showing that their action, complained of by the body, was taken under the advice of the City-Attorney, who informed them that they could take no other course, and that they had no discretion in the premises. Mr. TRACY's trial upon the indictment for extortion, in exacting fees from certain parties as a condition of bringing a civil suit against them in the name of the city, is set down for Monday next. The friends of the accused anticipate his acquittal upon technical grounds. The facts of his case briefly are these: C. R. GARRISON, ABRAM PEARSON, and others, were indicted for a nuisance in having taken possession of a public street and covered it with buildings, lumber yards, &c. The defendants saw that they were certain to be convicted, and as there could be no appeal taken from this result, so as to enable them to try the title of the city to the property, or to delay for a while the necessity of abandoning it, they desired the criminal suits suspended, and a civil suit instituted instead. It was the duty of Mr. TRACY, as City Attorney, to institute this civil suit, if instituted at all; and the charge now is that he exacted a fee of $1,000, cash down, as the indispensable condition of his performing an act which the city already paid him for! If true, the charge involves him in the disgraceful practice of taking fees from both sides of the case. Several of the parties who desired the civil suit against themselves, swear positively that they paid the "black-mail" money into the hands of one of the most respectable law firms of this State, with the distinct understanding that it was to be paid to Mr. TRACY for the purpose above mentioned, and that they fully believe it was so paid—for, immediately thereafter the civil suit was brought, and the criminal indictments have been allowed ever since to stand unacted upon. The law firm are expected to decline on professional grounds to tell to whom they paid the money; and the defence anticipate, therefore, that the prosecution will fail to show that Mr. TRACY actually received the money. The alternative in the public mind will naturally be that highly respectable members of the legal profession went about among the parties indicted for a nuisance and obtained the paltry sum of $1,000 to put into their own pockets upon the false pretence that they had got to pay it out again to the City Attorney. Whatever the result of the trial before a jury, public sentiment will demand not only that Mr. TRACY shall escape the penalty of the law, but that he shall clear his skirts of all suspicion. He was accorded the privilege of appearing before the Grand Jury to explain away the facts against him, but instead of denying that he received the money, virtually admitted them by attempting to defend his right to receive the money,—and also by claiming that, technically, he was not a "city official," but retained by the President of the Board of Supervisors in his individual capacity.

A fire occurred on Tuesday morning in this city, on Kearney-street, between Jackson and Pacific streets, which for a while threatened destruction to all the neighborhood. It originated in the restaurant of one FRANK WILLIAMS, and soon the flames enveloped five frame buildings, all of which were destroyed. All the buildings in that section are of the most inflammable character, and stand close together. Fortunately there was no wind blowing, or even the prompt exertions of our Fire Department (a branch of the New-York "institution," and the best in the world) could not have saved the adjoining squares. The principal losses were sustained by Edward White and Frank Williams, restaurant keepers; a tailor named Hoppe; F. W. Pinkham, carpenter; Wm. Carpenter, saloon; Mr. Wass and Mr. Spigelstien.

A fire occurred at Benicia on the same day, which destroyed the building known as the "Bella Union," together with the "El Dorado" and the house of a Mr. BIRON.

A letter received here from Guaymas, Sonora, dated the 9th of May, states that large numbers of Americans were leaving the country, disgusted with the prospect of its acquisition during BUCHANAN's Administration. Among the number was Judge ROSS, United States Consul, who was sent out as the agent of Col. SAM. COLT and other capitalists, to purchase lands, &c., on speculation, based on the expectation that the country was about to be practically Americanized. ROSS had resigned, and, probably, is in Washington by this time.

PHIL. HERBERT, SAM. FLOWERS and some thirty or forty Americans had been ordered out of Hermosillo by a mob, led by an Ex-Judge of First Instance. HERBERT will be remembered as the California Congressman who killed a waiter at Willard's Hotel, in Washington. He was about starting for the Gadsden Purchase.

Our merchants are already alive to the chances which may grow out of the anticipated European war. The ship Kit Carson sailed on Sunday last for Iquique, Peru, with a load of California grain. At Iquique her master purposes to load with nitrate of soda, for Liverpool, with which to supply the British powder-manufactories.

We have quite a large sprinkling of Italians in our San Francisco population. Indeed, our fisheries are almost entirely in the hands of Italians, who conduct their shore operations in a little quarter of their own, which bears not a little resemble to a fishing village under their native skies. We have also many Italians of a much better class. It is stated that 15 of the latter left in the Golden Age, on Monday last, on their way to Europe, with a view of proffering their services for the regeneration of Italy.

The wife and two children of ROBERT S. LENVILLE were burned to death on Tuesday last, at their residence, about two miles from Lafayette, in Contra Costa county. LENVILLE, while engaged in his corral, a short distance from the house, seeing his dwelling on fire, hastened towards it. On the way he found his wife near a spring of water, to which her sufferings had led her, but so horribly burned that she lived a few minutes only, having been able only to exclaim: "The lamp." Her two children, a boy of three years, and another only six months, perished in the burning house. There seems to be no doubt that this heart-rending occurrence resulted from the explosion of a fluid lamp.

The young German who shot himself for disappointed love, on Meiggs' wharf, on Sunday last, has since died. It is believed that his true name was HENRY MICHAEL. A note, found upon his person, thus indicates that the shot was no accidental:

"Do not accuse anybody of this deed. I have committed it myself. I am tired of life, and would rather be dead. Many persons will say that I was crazy; do not believe it; I have my full senses. Life has no more joy for me; it is lost for me, and I am lost for it. My deed may kill my mother, but I cannot help it. Good-bye, World.

H. MELVIN is not my real name, but used that my mother and sisters may not know of my death."

ALLEN S. MECHLING, formerly from Butler County, Pennsylvania, committed suicide at Yorkville, Placer County, on the 30th May, by shooting himself through the head with a pistol. He seemed to be laboring at the time under heavy mental excitement. A letter found in his pocket, dated the 25th of MAY, and addressed to "ALICK SAY," informs the latter that he had wronged the writer, as well as "Uncle JOSEY S——," in suspecting them of taking his money.

CHARLES B. ROSE, aged about twenty-eight, a native of Philadelphia, hung himself in Calaveras County several days ago. It has been ascertained that he was pecuniarily embarrassed, although in small amount, and it is generally believed that while laboring under the sense of ingratitude, combined with his pecuniary misfortunes, he determined on putting an end to his life.

The inquest upon the body of JOSEPH PETTY, of Michigan, who died suddenly at the What Cheer House, in this city, resulted in a verdict of suicide by strychnine. He had been at the house several days, and on several occasions was noticed to act wildly and strange.

FREDERICK W. HOLMES, a blacksmith, while laboring under the effects of excessive potations, committed suicide on the 31st of MAY, by cutting his throat, at Putah.

WILLIAM MORRIS, alias "Tipperary Bill," is to be hanged in this city to-day, for the murder of RICHARD DOAK. He professes penitence and resignation to his fate.

Mr. B. FRANZ, formerly a liquor merchant at Nevada, was shot and badly wounded at Alleghanytown on Sunday, by S. MANGENBERG. It seems the latter was refused the hand of FRANZ's daughter, for which he insulted him grossly on the street. The father knocked the lover down, and then the latter shot him. The wound will not prove fatal.

Col. FREMONT has just got his great quartz drill in operation on the Mariposa claim, and those who for years have been busiest in opposing his works hitherto are now loudest in its praise. It is fully believed that the Colonel and his associates will reap a rich reward for their persevering enterprise.

Mr. CLAYTON, of Greenburg, Westmoreland County, Penn., was accidentally killed on the 24th of May, by a mass of rock falling upon him, near Sonora, Tuolumne County.

In illustration of the prosperity of our miners, I append a few items from large numbers, of which the interior papers are full. In Nevada County, at Humbug Flat, MYERS & Co., have got down to the bed rock, and are making $16 a day to each hand. FULLER, VAN SICKE & Co., on Republican Hill, are making $10 per day to the hand. The old Marlow claim, and the claims of the Canadian Company opposite Republican Hill, given up years ago as worthless, have been paying $15 a day to the hand, during the last three months. A number of individual mining claims on Manzanita Hill and vicinity have been sold this season at $2,000 and $3 000 each. At Omega, PRESBATT & Co. are paying $18 per day to the hand. Messrs. GONIGLE & Co. about $10. None of the claims pay less than $4. At Diamond Creek two men —HACKETT and KIRTLY—realized $300 for three days' labor. This is the first company that has completely opened this locality.

In Tuolumne County, the old Brainerd claim on Gold Hill, which four years ago was sold for a song and supposed to have been nearly exhausted, has recently yielded 40 ounces, worth $700, during a single week. On Secret Gulch, two men took out 30 ounces in a week. Look at these facts, and the five millions per month which we send you in gold, and then say whether California does not present superior advantages for industrious men who are able and willing to work.

The steamer Farwood arrived from Victoria this morning, brings very gloomy accounts from the gold regions of British Columbia, but no general news of interest. Miners were continuing to return, discouraged, from the Upper Frazer River country. The Chinamen, however, who are satisfied with smaller gains, are constantly finding their way to the mines, where they remain.

Tragedies.

ASSASSINATION IN ILLINOIS.

A letter from Carlinville, Ill., to the St. Louis Republican says: "An old gentleman by the name of CIRCY, aged 73 years, from Kentucky, arrived here on Monday evening last, on his way to visit his sons living in this county, accompanied by a young man who formed his acquaintance on the boat plying between your city and New-Orleans. They stayed in this place until the following morning, when the old gentleman hired a horse and buggy, and left here with the young man for his son's farm. When about eight miles from town, and when they were going through a dark, gloomy bottom, it is supposed that the young man feigned an excuse to stop and go into the woods, leaving the old gentleman to hold the horse, whereupon the young man cut a club, came back unseen by the old man, and struck him senseless in the buggy. From appearances in the road, there had been a severe struggle between the two men. The road was so greatly marked up by the scuffle, that a passer-by observing this, the horse and buggy without any driver, and a hat in the road, suspicioned something wrong. He stated the case at the first house, when a company of men repairing to the place spoken of, found as described, and the old man weltering in his blood. He was most horribly beaten, had a large stab in the neck, and the club which had caused his death lying across his arms. Nothing was to be found of the young man who had accompanied him. The sons of the murdered man had been expecting their father for a number of days, and being uneasy of his welfare, one of them started a few days since for Kentucky to learn of his detention. He is still on his way unconscious of his father's fate. The old gentleman had purchased lands in this county for his sons and came to pay for them. He was to bring about $2,500, which amount it is supposed he had with him when murdered."

TWO OTHER TRAGEDIES.

The Howard County (Indiana) Tribune, June 27, says: "This morning, just as it was beginning to get light, ISAAC PLOUGHE, proprietor of the Kokomo Hotel, was found by his family trying to get in the back door of his own house, with his head cut in the most horrible manner. Upon examination of the place where he had been, at the wood-pile, the chips had an appearance that looked as if butchering had been done. The chips all around were besprinkled, and the axe was covered with blood, the handle being as red as if it had been dipped with blood. There were not less than twenty cuts on the head of Mr. P., in front and behind. Most of them seem to have been inflicted with the inside corner of the axe. It is possible that the wounds may not prove fatal."

The Lafayette (Ind.) Journal, June 24, says: "On Friday morning last, a gentleman arrived at Lahr's Hotel, in Lafayette, and registered himself as D. FRANKLIN, of Memphis, Tennessee. In company with him was a person named G. D. ALLEN, who also registered himself as from Memphis, and CHARLES HOLBROOK, of Attica, in this State. It transpired from some remarks made by ALLEN that they were in pursuit of a runaway negro, belonging to Mr. FRANKLIN, whose overseer ALLEN represented himself to be. HOLBROOK had been engaged to assist them. They left the hotel after breakfast on Friday morning, and were last seen together in a very suspicious locality in the northern part of the city. It was known that FRANKLIN had a large amount of money about him, and his failure to return to the hotel, where his baggage remained, excited suspicion, particularly as HOLBROOK bears a bad character. On Saturday evening, ALLEN and HOLBROOK turned up in Attica, without FRANKLIN. On Monday, a warrant was issued for their arrest. They were brought to this city on Monday evening, and on yesterday were arraigned before Judge WOOD of the Common Pleas Court, for examination. This had barely commenced, when a Mr. SAMUEL BEST, of West Point, entered the Court room, and informed the Prosecuting Attorney that a young man had been arrested in that place, on Sunday, for larceny, and made statements to the effect that he knew of a murder having been committed in or near this city on the Friday previous, and that he could point out the spot where the body of the victim was buried. His description of the murdered man tallies exactly with the personal appearance of the missing FRANKLIN.

Summer Fashions in France.

From a Paris Correspondent.

Summer is the season for departures and arrivals, and in Paris the streets and shops are full of bustle. Women on the eve of going to complete their purchases, the new comers to replenish their wardrobes the heat obliges everybody to make some change, and whichever way you turn, the scene is animated and lively. Light shawls of every description are in greater request than ever; the plain grenadines are unquestionably the most fashionable, and they are delicately embroidered with black silk. Those which have wreaths of vine-leaves, oak-leaves, grapes, or acorns, are trimmed also with black Chantilly lace, as guipure would be too heavy. Groseille, and light green, are the favorite colors in grenadine shawls; but black and violet are pretty and very much worn. Sometimes they are made with two or three rows of gold braid or twist, and hanging over this trimming, we have seen a row of gold pendants, an Arabian fashion which has a charming effect. These new shawls are named "Stephania," after the young Queen of Portugal. They are only adopted by carriage ladies; for in Paris it is a general rule to avoid wearing gold in the streets. If gold thread finds its way among the black trimmings, so much employed this year for bonnets, it is seldom seen on straw, and when it does appear the owner is looked upon as fantastical and eccentric.

A new ribbon, lately introduced, has earned the admiration and approbation of all who are endowed with good taste. It is black and figured with embossed flowers, say for instance, roses, pansies, or lilac. Outside the bonnet is a bunch of flowers, which corresponds precisely with the one represented on the ribbon, and inside is a wreath of the same, entirely surrounding the face. This harmonious idea is due to Mme. GERVAISE, who has ordered quantities of ribbons and flowers to match, and it is a great improvement on the motley mixture so prevalent last year.

Muslin dresses are more frequent than anything else. They are made with flounces which are edged with lace, or the flounces are tucked, which gives them strength. This method is particularly suitable for white muslin, but what above all things ought to be avoided are white jackets and black skirts. White jackets are entirely abandoned; they have been too long tolerated, and they dare now left to the tender mercies of the lady's maid. Light silk dresses, fit for cooler days, are made with full plain skirts, which get less ample as they approach the waist. About half a yard from the bottom of the skirt is a flat ruche of whole colored taffetas, which is carried up the sides, and made to look like a second skirt. The corsage is square, with a taffetas ruche all round the shoulders, and instead of a fichu, it is worn with a full tucker of white silk tulle. The sleeves are open and reach to the middle of the arm. It is quite immaterial in this case, whether under-sleeves are worn or the arm left bare. If they are preferred, they should be in silk tulle or lace, and ornamented with ribbons or narrow velvet. Guipure and thick muslin are not proper materials to accompany an elegant dress such as we have described. They are fit for negligé, as are all sleeves closed at the wrist. Our linen warehouse make a more luxurious display than ever, and laces and insertions are in a fair way of being superseded by embroideries.

Commutation of Plumer's Sentence—Plumer's Card of Thanks.

From the Boston Atlas and Bee, July 7.

J. M. COOPER, a special messenger from the office of the Attorney-General of the United States, arrived in this city yesterday, bringing to United States Marshal FREEMAN an official document, signed by the President, commuting the sentence against CYRUS W. PLUMER to imprisonment for life. The Marshal, with the messenger, proceeded at once to the jail, and the document was read to the prisoner, in the presence of Dr. WINSLOW, the Rev. Dr. LOTHROP, the Rev. PHINEAS STOW, JOHN S. ANDREW, Esq., F. H. PELTON, Esq., and others, friends, who have been interested in PLUMER. By the telegraph dispatch, of which he had heard, and by a letter which the Rev. Dr. LOTHROP had received from Washington, PLUMER's mind had been somewhat prepared for the intelligence which the special messenger and the official document brought him. He was deeply affected, but controled his feelings in a manly way. After an exchange of congratulations, most of the party left the jail. Mr. PLUMER, through one of them, desired to express his thanks in the following card:

PLUMER'S CARD.

I desire to express my thanks to all the friends and editors of public journals who have been active in my behalf; to all the signers of petitions in my favor; to many friends at Washington, to the members of the Cabinet, and especially to the President of the United States, for the change which has been made in my sentence, and to assure them that my future conduct shall show that interest has not been felt or mercy shown to a bad or unworthy man. (Signed.) C. W. PLUMER.

As stated above, PLUMER, on hearing the document read, was much affected; too much so to give expression to his feelings. The intelligence, however, was indescribably gratifying to him, and it will be so to the Community at large.

In a conversation shortly after the above interesting event, PLUMER said that if the awful sentence of the law had been carried out, he should have died like a man; to this he had fully made up his mind, though still asserting his innocence of the crime alleged against him. Amid the burdens that pressed so heavily upon him, he maintained a courage that was truly heroic.

The Marshal was unable to comply with the request of our reporter for a copy of the commutation document, it not having been officially presented to the District Attorney, who had but a few moments before left for Nahant. Its contents are, in substance, that the sentence is changed from death to imprisonment for life, in deference to the 20,000 and more petitioners who have asked for the clemency Emphasis is also given upon PLUMER's efforts in saving the lives of the first and second mates. The President very properly regards this as a strongly redeeming act, and one which has, in no little degree, changed his mind. The remainder of the document is mainly of a technical character, giving directions as to carrying out the commutation and imprisonment.

PLUMER will be removed to the State Prison in Charlestown in a few days, where we have no doubt his conduct will be such as to reward the labors of his friends who have brought about this gratifying result.

From the Washington Star, July 6.

We are glad to learn that yesterday President BUCHANAN commuted to imprisonment for life, the sentence of death impending over the youth, CYRUS W. PLUMER, the mutineer, of whose case the public have heard so much through the newspapers of late. New testimony was brought to the notice of the President, we understand, which gave the case a different aspect from that which bore on the trial, resulting in the conviction of mutiny and murder. The case has elicited more interest in Boston and New-York than any other one known to the history of maritime tragedies. Some twenty thousand persons, principally immediately connected with maritime affairs, besought the President to this exercise of his prerogative, by petitions, most of them being actuated not by personal sympathy with the youth, but rather by a conviction that, under the circumstances, it was due to public justice and right that he should not be made a victim of circumstances, for which he was really far less responsible than others who had escaped through the law's meshes. In his action in this case, the public will see that the President has carried out his purpose so inflexibly maintained, of permitting no other than that of the public good, to induce him to interpose his prerogative between the law and its victims.

THE OBERLIN RESCUERS PRINTING A PAPER.—The Rescuer is the title of a small sheet, edited by the Oberlin Rescuers in jail at Cleveland, the first number of which was issued on the 4th of July. The principal editor is Prof. PECK, who explains the appearance of the paper as follows:

"After the 'political prisoners' had remained in jail for seventy-five days, they began to find themselves possessed of 'thoughts that breathed and words that burned.' We not only wished to utter them, but we wished to print them. Could the thing be done? We looked around for printers and found among the 'prisoners' two rusty and dilapidated 'typos,' one of whom had not handled a 'stick' for fifteen years. Would the Sheriff allow us a corner of the jail for a printing-office? We asked him. Generous as ever, he replied, 'Certainly, and I'll help you, too, if I can.' 'O, where shall type be found?' we next inquired. The generous purchasers of our old printing-office responded by lending us a font of small pica, and the liberal publisher of the Cleveland Daily Leader (the very paper which would please you, gentle reader,) added more, with other things. For a 'plane' we used a carpenter's, with the irons knocked out. A policeman's club answered for a mallet in 'taking proof,' and for the other purposes, we could select a pounding instrument from a large pile of shackles which lay at our feet. A fellow prisoner supplied us with 'side sticks,' 'quoins,' and 'regiet,' made from a whitewood board. Another prisoner sawed up a fence board to make a 'rack.' (Quite like a 'felon' that, but we must settle it with the Commissioners.) For a 'shooting stick'—not the dangerous kind which we have understood 'rescuers' sometimes use, but a simpler instrument—we hewed out a piece of stave, and the door-stone answered for a 'table.' Thus furnished, and with the ample space of just five feet by ten for a printing-office we proceeded to establish the Rescuer. If we labor under difficulties it is but appropriate, for 'rescuers' always do. We forgot to express regret that we could not procure ITALICS. Many were needed. We must ask our readers to supply the emphasis according to taste."

THE WHEAT CROP IN MICHIGAN.—At last we have some definite knowledge of the wheat crop in Michigan, and are happy to be able to congratulate our readers that neither the late untimely frosts, the doleful croaking of unscrupulous bulls, nor the anxious fears of nervous agriculturists, have had any effect in defeating our hopes of an abundant harvest. True, the June frosts did much mischief, especially on heavy soils, and on the borders of wet and marshy lands, but the amount thus destroyed was comparatively very inconsiderable, and will be more than made up by the unusual excellence of the crop on lighter and drier soils. In the reports that were circulated of disaster to the crop, molehills were often magnified into mountains by the fears of those most directly interested; and that again much more was heard from those sections than from places where no cause for complaint existed. Hence the misgivings that have generally prevailed with reference to the approaching harvest. In the southern portions of the State harvest has already commenced, and all danger being now past from all quarters do we hear the most satisfactory reports.—Detroit Advertiser, July 6.

Burning of the ship Stalwart.

PARTICULARS OF THE DISASTER—PASSENGERS AND CREW SAVED BY A BRITISH BARK.

The destruction of the ship Stalwart by fire, in latitude 46°17', longitude 33°30', while on a voyage from New-Orleans to Liverpool, has already been announced. Capt. W. H. LUCUS gives the following particulars of the disaster:

Sunday, June 12th—sea account—commenced with a light breeze from S. S. W., with clear and pleasant weather, middle and latter part light breezes from W. S. W. to N. W., with a thick fog, all sail set to the best advantage. At midnight, a strong smell of smoke was perceived in the cabin, and search was immediately made to discover the cause of it; took off the after hatch leading to the store-room, just aft of the cabin, and found large volumes of smoke issuing therefrom,—called all hands immediately, and searched the entire storeroom, but found no fire there. The smoke gradually increasing in density, bored an augur hole through the storeroom deck into the between decks; found the fire to be in the after part of the ship below, and rapidly increasing; plugged up the augur hole, and used every endeavor to smother the fire, but without avail, for in about two hours the fire broke through into the after cabin, and the whole after part of the ship below was in a complete blaze. Found our endeavors to arrest the progress of the flames unavailing, as it gained so rapidly, and the dense smoke and heat were almost unbearable. The ship was then kept close to the wind, on the port tack, under easy sail, and preparations made to abandon her if it should become necessary to do so. The officers and crew were detailed to various duties, getting the boats in readiness, water and provisions for the same; getting out the specie from the cabin to the forward part of the ship; but being driven out by the smoke and flames a portion of the specie was abandoned. Shortly after daylight the fog lifted, and a sail was made, bearing E.S.E., about three miles distant, standing to the eastward. The ship was kept away for her, and the colors set Union down. In a short time the fog again set in, the Stalwart keeping her course in the direction of the sail. About 6 o'clock the mizzen mast fell over the stern; an hour after the fog again lifted, and we discovered a sail bearing W. NW, about five miles distant, and steering directly for us; soon after, she took in her light sails and set her colors. The fire was now gaining rapidly forward. The three female passengers, with an officer and a part of the crew, were placed in one of the boats. About 4 A. M. the flames broke through the upper deck aft, and drove the man from the wheel; the topsails were then clewed down, and the main and mizzen hove aback to keep the ship's head to the wind, and prevent the flames from spreading forward. The boats, with a barrel of bread and one of water, a compass, chart and quadrant in each, were then lowered down and hauled forward as far as possible. About 9 A. M. the entire ship as far as the main rigging was in a blaze, the flames reaching to the mizzen topmast head. Soon after the sail, which proved to be the British bark Princess Helene, of White Haven, Capt. CONNELL, from Demerara for Cork, hove to, just to windward, and lowered a boat. The boat containing the females was sent on board the bark, and the specie saved was placed in another boat and sent on board, and a part of the crew were sent off in the third boat. At 9½ A. M., the flames reaching to the main-topmast, canting forward, cut away the main-topmast back stays, to prevent it from falling forward. At this time the ship was burned to the water's edge, as far as amidships, and sinking fast by the stern. The few remaining on board were then ordered into the remaining boat, who had hardly shoved off when the mainmast fell over the side, part of the rigging falling across the boat. The flames now completely enveloped the ship. The boat then proceeded to the bark, where all were kindly received, and every attention paid us by Capt. CONNELL and crew. Shortly after noon not a vestige of the Stalwart was to be seen. The cause of the fire is unknown. The ship had been out from the Bar 28 days, and there was no communication with that part of the ship where the fire was discovered.

Kidnappers on Trial at Cleveland.

From the Cleveland Leader, July 6.

The kidnapping cases of JACOB K. LOWE, DANIEL DAVIS, ANDERSON JENNINGS and RICHARD P. MITCHELL are set for to-day in the Lorain Common Pleas. JENNINGS, MITCHELL and BACON, the Kentucky slave-owner and catchers, have been in this quarter and Canada for some days, making thorough search by agents and otherwise in the Queen's free dominions for the rescued JOHN. Failing to find him, and acting on the advice of BELDEN, the Government Counsel provided by the Administration at Washington, they have been trying to escape merited justice and a trial in Lorain through a writ of habeas corpus, issued by Judge MCLEAN, and made returnable to MCLEAN or WILLSON. Marshal JOHNSON's engineering of the writ is worth recording. Early Saturday morning JENNINGS called on Sheriff BURR and told him Marshal JOHNSON was in town, and inquired when he would be back. He was told at night. JENNINGS left and BURR went on his business. JOHNSON called at the Sheriff's office and found him absent. He dispatched a messenger for the Sheriff, but the Lorain officer sent word back that the Marshal could come to him if his business was urgent. On the Sheriff's return at evening, JENNINGS accosted him by the roadside. Having other business to transact, after putting out his horse, the Sheriff went about it, and JOHNSON and JENNINGS had to forego the pleasure of an interview until Sunday morning. Then the United States Marshal inquired of the Sheriff if he received prisoners on Sunday. The reply was he did on proper papers. JOHNSON wished to surrender the kidnappers, but admitted that he had no order to do so from the Lorain Court. The Sheriff, of course, declined to receive them. Monday morning, the kidnappers, their bail, and Government counsel and officials, were on hand bright and early to get the indicted into jail or the custody of the Lorain Sheriff by some sort of sharp practice. Foiled in this, for the Sheriff knew his duty too well to receive them without an order of Court, the baffled and enraged United States Attorney BELDEN directed the Marshal to serve the writ of habeas corpus issued by Judge MCLEAN on Sheriff BURR. This was done, and yesterday the Sheriff appeared at the United States Court House in this City, and made return of the writ that the persons named therein were not in his custody, which return was accepted, and the Sheriff returned to open Court in Lorain and call the kidnappers to trial to-day. The Hon. Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, has come up to defend the Kentuckians.

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE.—We learn from a correspondent at Hanover, that some trouble has lately occurred between the faculty and four of the senior class—two of whom have abandoned their connection with the College, and will graduate elsewhere. They are students of high ability, and have ever sustained a good reputation. One of them had been elected class officer for class day, which will now be given up, as all the class officers intend to resign. The offence was absence of a week from college—the penalty loss of standing. Unable to see the President to gain permission to absent themselves, they sought to be excused after their return, but without success.—Boston Journal.

PUBLIC LANDS—IMPORTANT DECISION.—The local land officers at Marysville, California, having asked instructions of the Commissioner of Lands, having General Land Office as to the proper construction of the act of 26th February, 1859, entitled "An act to authorize settlers upon sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, who settled before the surveys of the public lands, to preempt their settlements," the Commissioner replied, that, in order to give [illegible] act a construction consistent with reason and justice, it was necessary to ascertain as near as possible the intention of the legislature, and, as a means of arriving at such intention, to consult previous legislation on the same subject. The acts of Congress authorizing settlements on unsurveyed lands, and the joint resolution of 3d March, 1857, authorizing preemption of school sections in Kansas, Nebraska, and Minnesota, are enlarging in their tendencies as well as beneficial and remedial. So with the act of 26th February, 1859. It should, therefore, receive a liberal construction. To adopt a construction that confines its provisions to settlers prior to its date, would defeat the object of Congress, and be an unreasonable and unjust discrimination in favor of such settlers, and inconsistent with all the uniform policy of Congress, as manifested by all previous legislation on the subject. The Commissioner concluded that the only rational and just interpretation of the act is, that it operates equally upon all settlers upon the class of lands contemplated. (school sections before they are surveyed,) whether their settlements be anterior or subsequent to its date.—Constitution.

TAMMANY GENERAL COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of the Tammany General Committee, last evening, MR. VAN ——, from the Special Committee appointed for the purpose, reported the following preamble and resolution: "Whereas, It is reported that attempts are making by interested parties to induce the Government of the United States to contract with them for the receipt, storage and delivery of goods sent to the public store, thereby throwing out of the public service a large number of men now employed there, for the purpose of enabling private individuals to pocket a profit upon the labor of those who may be hereafter employed there; therefore Resolved, That this Committee utterly repudiate the idea that our system of self-government has proved in any degree a failure, and can see no more reason why the duties above specified should be contracted to private parties, than there is for making a like arrangement in respect to the collection of the revenue and other Governmental service; that if there is any profit to be made upon any labor or other service it should accrue to the national treasury, and not to private pockets; and that if those now charged with the duties sought to be given to private contractors, are either wasteful or incompetent, the proper remedy is to remove them from office and appoint in their places Democrats of undoubted honesty and capacity." It was adopted by a vote of 42 ayes to 4 nays. Messrs. KISSNER, VANCE and KISSNER were appointed a Committee to report next Tuesday evening, a resolution expressing disapprobation of the letter of Secretary CASS with regard to the rights of naturalized citizens abroad, and the Committee adjourned to Tuesday evening.

MISSIONARIES TO CHINA ORDAINED.—An overflowing audience assembled at St. George's (the Rev. Dr. TYNG'S) Church yesterday morning to witness the ordination of four Deacons for the Episcopal Mission to China. Among the bishops and clergymen present were the Right Rev. Bishop BOONE, Miss. Bp. to China; the Right Rev. Bishop SOUTHGATE, Miss. Bp. to Turkey: the Right Rev. Bishop PAYNE, Miss. Bp. to Africa; the Right Rev. the Bishop SMITH of Kentucky; the Rev. Dr. TYNG and others. After the usual religious services, the Rev. Drs. HAWKS and STEVENS officiating, the Rev. Dr. TYNG stated that one of the Missionaries to be ordained had not reached the City. He would, therefore, be ordained at the Church of the Ascension next Sunday morning at 10½ A. M., by Bishop BOONE. Dr. TYNG read a letter from Bishop POTTER in which the latter expressed his regret that numerous engagements prevented him from being present on this occasion. The Rev. WM. SPARROW, D.D., of the Theological Seminary, Fairfax, Co., Va., preached the sermon from Mark xvi. 15 —"And He said unto them go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." At its conclusion Messrs. S. J. J. SCHERECHAWSKY, HENRY FOSDICK, and E. H. THOMPSON were formally ordained by Bishop BOONE, and the exercises were closed as they had been opened with appropriate services.

A STREET FIGHT—JAMES QUINLAN LOSES HIS NOSE.—Since the conviction of JAMES GLASS for the murder of ROBERT OWENS, and his incarceration in the State Prison, JAMES QUINLAN and JAMES LOFTUS, two of the chief witnesses on the trial, have been nursing vindictive feelings toward each other. Whenever they came together mutual abuse and recrimination have ensued. On Wednesday night they met on the corner of Centre and Worth streets. QUINLAN called LOFTUS a perjurer, and intimated that it was he who had shot OWENS, and that GLASS was entirely innocent. The altercation attracted a crowd. From words proceeded blows and bites. In the struggle QUINLAN lost his nose, and left the scene of combat in despair. The Police appearing LOFTUS also retired. A complaint was made against the latter for felonious assault. He was, yesterday afternoon, arrested by Officer WILSON, of the City Hall Police Court, taken before Alderman BRADY, and held in $1,000 bail to answer the charge.

EXTENDING AND WIDENING GOLD-STREET.—The Committee on Streets of the Board of Aldermen met at 2 P. M. yesterday—Alderman BOOLE presiding—in room No. 8 City Hall, to consider the petition asking for the extension and widening of Gold-street. A number of property owners on the street came forward and opposed the petition. Several who said they had signed it several years ago, stated that they were not in favor of the project now; the opening of the New Bowery rendered it unnecessary to extend Gold-street. Nobody appeared to support the project, and the Committee adjourned to Tuesday next, at 2 o'clock, for the purpose of hearing those who are in favor of it. The next will be the last meeting that the Committee will hold for the consideration of this subject.

STREET CLEANING.—The City Inspector had a large force of men at work yesterday cleaning the streets. The day-laborers thus employed receive $1 50 each per day. Plenty of men would be willing to perform the work at $1 per day; but, by a resolution passed by the Common Council just before the last Presidential election, $1 50 per day is made the rate at which all laborers employed by the City Departments must be paid. Mr. DELAVAN yesterday rode through a large number of the Wards of the City to examine the condition of the streets. The pavements of those he passed through yesterday, he says, require repairing quite as much as those of the streets which he inspected the day before. The Seventeenth Ward is in an unusually cleanly condition.

NEW-JERSEY INVADED.—The New-Jersey Railroad and Transportation Company carried fifteen thousand passengers over their road on the Fourth of July. Eleven thousand of these were passengers between Newark and New-York. Saturday preceding and Tuesday following the Fourth the travel reached about the same average. No detention or accident occurred to any of the trains. The Northern Railroad of New-Jersey, which has its terminus at Jersey City, carried about four thousand passengers between that place and Piermont on Monday.

A COWARDLY ASSAULT.—JAMES RYAN, oyster opener in a Broadway saloon, was arrested yesterday and taken before Justice CONNOLLY, on a charge of felonious assault. RYAN had been on bad terms with MICHAEL JENNINGS for some time, and seeing him in company with some females in Leonard-street, on Wednesday evening, it is alleged that RYAN deliberately walked up to him and struck him on the head with a club. JENNINGS was taken to his residence in an insensible condition. It is said his wounds are dangerous.

DEATH OF A FIREMAN.—JAMES GARREN, a native of this City, twenty-six years of age, died at the City Hospital, yesterday, from injuries received by being run over on the evening of the 5th inst., by Engine No. 38. Deceased had hold of the tongue, when, becoming exhausted with the running, he let go and attempted to jump aside; not succeeding, the engine passed over his body. Coroner SCHIRMER held an inquest. Verdict, accidental death.

Among the passengers in the steamer Persia, which left this port Wednesday for Liverpool, were Ex President Comonfort, of Mexico; the Hon. J. R. Benjamin, United States Senator from Louisiana; Wm. Moore, British Consul at New-Orleans; the Hon. S. Beardsley, of Utica; the Hon. R. W. Peckham, of Albany; Archer Anderson, Thos. R. Price, Jr., and Alexander Q. Holliday, of Richmond, &c. A full list will be found in another column.

CULPABLE NEGLIGENCE.—The workmen engaged in clearing the culvert on the corner of Catharine and Cherry streets omitted to close it on Wednesday night. Their carelessness caused the serious injury of Mrs. MARY CONNOLLY, an old lady 84 years of age, and a resident of Staten Island, who, in passing, fell into the opening. She was conveyed to the City Hospital.

SERIOUSLY INJURED BY A RUNAWAY HORSE.—In the Sixteenth Ward, on Wednesday evening, a man, whose name could not be ascertained, was knocked down and trampled upon by a runaway horse, with wagon attached. Upon examination his ribs were found to be broken. He was otherwise torn and bruised. Taken to Bellevue Hospital.

FALL FROM A WINDOW.—A young Irishman named JOHN O'BRIEN accidentally fell from a fourth story window in White-street, yesterday afternoon, breaking both legs and one of his arms. He was taken to the City Hospital.

TRIED TO KILL HERSELF.—A poor white woman named MARY WHITE, living at No. 16 Thomas-street was the wife of STEPHEN WHITE, a negro, under depression of spirits tried to end her life with laudanum. She was relieved of the poison at the City Hospital.

FERRY TRAVEL ON THE FOURTH OF JULY.—The travel between Brooklyn and New-York on Independence day, is estimated at 77,000, as follows: Thirty-fourth-street to Hunter's Point, 3,000; Twenty-third-street to Greenpoint, 1,000; Tenth-street to Greenpoint, 1,000; Houston-street to Williamsburgh, 2,000; Division-avenue to Williamsburgh, 3,000; Grand-street to Williamsburgh, 1,500; Catharine-street to Brooklyn, 3,700; James-slip to Brooklyn, 6,000; Bridge-street to Brooklyn, 1,200; Peck-slip to Williamsburgh, 9,000; Fulton-street to Brooklyn, 20,000; Wall street to Brooklyn, 5,000; South Ferry to Brooklyn, 10,000; Hamilton-avenue to Brooklyn, 10,000."

DEMOCRATIC GENERAL COMMITTEE.—The regular monthly meeting of the Mozart Hall Democratic General Committee was held last evening. CHARLES A. MAY was appointed President, and EDWD. TIMSON and GEO. W. HOSMER Secretaries. One hundred and thirteen members were present. A series of resolutions was adopted, affirming, as the sense of the Committee, that the next State Convention for nominating the State ticket should confine its labors solely to that end, and abstain from all discussion as to the mode of choosing national delegates; but that the Committee favored the choice of such delegates by Congressional Districts. The resolutions further claim that the Democratic Press throughout the State favors this course, and they call upon the State Central Committee to act in accordance with the expressed wish of the people. With reference to City politics, the resolutions affirm the intention of the Committee to bring forward independent candidates in opposition to those of "Sr. Tammany," and invite those of the Democratic masses who adhere to the "secret and selfish rule of Tammany Society," to join them in their efforts to save the party from disruption and demoralization.

ALLEGED OUTRAGE AT HOBOKEN.—On Thursday evening, about 6 o'clock, two men, named MICHAEL L. BURNS, of Newark, and PHILIP J. MEALLY, No. 23 Great Jones-street, New-York, were in company together at McCarthy's Hotel, in the Elysian Fields, Hoboken, when some angry words passed between them. On their way home, and in walking over the eminence known as Sybil's Cave, (some thirty feet in height,) BURNS deliberately took MEALLY in his arms and flung him headlong from the top of the wall to the ground, causing two desperate wounds in the back part of his head, nearly two inches in depth. The wounded man lies in a very dangerous condition at his residence in Great Jones street, to which he was brought by Officer MCDONOUGH. The offender was arrested at the ferry, and brought before Justice O'NEIL, who committed him for trial in default of $500 bail. Mr. MEALLY is a well-known down-town merchant in New-York.

AWARDS CONFIRMED.—The reports of the Commissioners appointed to superintend the following improvements making the following awards to property-owners deemed to have been injured by the loss of portions of their property, have recently been confirmed by the Supreme Court:

The awards, though marked "due," will not be paid till the parties remove their buildings.

DIED FROM DRUNKENNESS.—An inquest was held yesterday on the body of PATRICK KEVLIN, an Irish porter, 45 years of age, of No. 69 Baxter street, who died suddenly on Wednesday evening. It was at first asserted that his death had been caused by a beating given by his wife, with whom he frequently quarreled. She was arrested but the investigation showed his decease to be attributable to his intemperate habits.

ACCIDENT TO THE STEAMBOAT STATE OF MAINE.—The State of Maine, which had taken the place of the Bay State, was proceeding to Fall River on Wednesday evening, when, off Huntington, the engineer discovered a crack in the cross head of the engine. Deeming it unsafe to proceed, she was stopped, and when the C. Vanderbilt came up the passengers were transferred to that steamer, and forwarded to their destination. The State of Maine then returned to the City, stopping at the Morgan Iron Works, where she will receive a new cross-head, and be ready, probably, to take her place in the line this evening. The Bay State will have a new pair of boilers. The Empire State has been in the hands of the mechanics for three months, and will be ready to resume her place on the route next week.

MAN STABBED BY HIS WIFE.—DENNIS SULLIVAN, a laborer, living in the tenement house rear of No. 51 Mulberry-street, returned home last evening, slightly intoxicated, and, feeling somewhat hungry, ordered his wife, MARGARET, to get supper ready. Instead of complying with the request, MARGARET snatched up a knife, and, jumping at DENNIS, inflicted a wound on the right side of his neck, severing several small arteries. The wound, which is not of a serious nature, was dressed at the Hospital, and MARGARET was arrested by Policeman GILLIGAN, of the Sixth Ward, and locked up.

THE SMITH-STREET BURGLARY.—Officer BUCKLEY, who was shot last July by burglars attempting to enter a house in Smith-street, publishes a card denying GORDON'S statement of the innocence of GRIFFITHS, who was convicted of the offence, and is now serving a term in State Prison. Officer B. denies that GORDON was the companion of the man by whom he was shot, and charges that the only object GORDON has in asserting his own guilt and GRIFFITHS' innocence, is to let loose in the community one of his old confederates in crime.

THAT EXPRESS BAG.—The express bag, which has become as celebrated as WISE or LAMOUNTAIN, in consequence of the adventurous voyage which it took from St. Louis to Lake Ontario, reached this City yesterday. It has its address written upon it, and externally does not look much the worse for wear. What is more important still, its contents have not materially suffered by two days' immersion in the water.

SUICIDE.—An unmarried German, 26 years of age, named MATTHEW GROUF, residing at No. 227 Stanton-street, committed suicide yesterday afternoon at his residence by taking a dose of phosphorus. It is supposed the cause of the act was his inability to obtain employment. A Coroner's inquest will be held to-day.

CITY HALL REPAIRS.—The Mayor has signed the resolution, which was passed recently by the Common Council, directing the Street Commissioner to prepare specifications, and to advertise for proposals to put the City Hall in thorough repair.

The steamship Glasgow sailed Wednesday for Glasgow, with 54 cabin and 86 steerage passengers—total, 140. She calls at St. Johns for the wrecked passengers of the steamer Argo.

RESCUED FROM DROWNING.—ROBERT WATSON, Ex-Policeman, yesterday fell into the river, in a fit, as he was fishing at the foot of Vesey-street. A colored man, called Black Joe, who works about the docks, saved WATSON from drowning.

MORE CHILDREN FOR THE WEST.—A very interesting company of children left this City yesterday afternoon, under the charge of Mr. TRACY, of the Children's Aid Society, who will place them in good homes in the West.

MUNICIPAL.

Board of Aldermen.

FIFTY DRINKING FOUNTAINS TO BE CONSTRUCTED —HUDSON-STREET TO BE PAVED WITH BELGIAN PAVEMENT.

The Board of Aldermen, last evening, adopted a resolution directing the Counsel to the Corporation to take the necessary legal measures to have Avenue C, from Fourteenth to Seventeenth-street, opened according to law.

The report of the Joint Special Committee appointed to redistrict the City, with an ordinance specifying the new election districts into which the City is to be divided, if it shall be passed, was presented and laid over, and it was directed that five hundred copies be printed.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Mayor the Board adopted a resolution directing that the five bells be rung on the 11th inst., while the solemnities in memory of Humboldt are in progress.

The Street Commissioners transmitted a communication setting forth that, on May 2d he opened bids for alterations and additions to Tompkins Market, and awarded four different contracts for the several portions of the job. It was laid on the table.

Alderman BOOLE called up the Mayor's veto of the report and resolutions in favor of continuing the contract with W. H. Woodruff for the removal of the night soil. After some discussion, it was laid on the table.

The Board concurred with the Board of Councilmen in adopting the report of the Special Committee, in favor of directing that fifty drinking hydrants be erected in various parts of the City.

George H. Purser, Corporation Attorney, presented a statement of the moneys received by him for the month of June for violations of corporation ordinances. The amount is $358 69.

The Report of the Committee on Streets in favor of paving Hudson-street, from Canal-street to Eighth-avenue, with Belgian pavement, was considered at great length, and was unanimously adopted. It directs that the expense shall be equally shared by the property owners, the Eighth-avenue Railroad Company, and the City.

The Board adjourned to Monday.

Fires.

BURNING OF A FAT-MELTING ESTABLISHMENT, &c.—LOSS $13,000.—The fat-melting establishment of Mr. JOHN J. ECKEL, located in Forty-fifth-street, near First-avenue, was totally destroyed by fire about 3 A. M., yesterday. The bells promptly gave the alarm, but the unreasonable hour prevented the usual early attendance of the firemen. The inflammable matter in the building caused its speedy destruction. Mr. ECKEL'S loss is $8,000. He was partially insured in City companies. The establishment had been made the subject of several complaints to the Board of Health.

An adjoining cooper's shop, owned by NICHOLAS FARNHAM, together with a quantity of barrels, was also destroyed. Loss about $1,000—insured for $500 in the Hamilton Fire Insurance Company.

Three frame buildings, owned by the "Butchers' Melting Association," were also injured to the extent of $2,000—fully insured.

A four story brick house, belonging to Fanning Mills, was damaged about $1,000 by fire and water.

It is supposed the place was intentionally fired, though suspicion rests upon no particular person.

FIRE IN PEARL-STREET.—The Seventh District alarm, at about 10½ o'clock last evening, was caused by a fire which was discovered in the cellar of the building, No. 214 Pearl-street, and No. 2 Fletcher-street. The flames spread rapidly, and the stock on the first and second floors was damaged to the extent of about $2 000. The building was damaged about $1,000. WILLIAM T. HICKS drug-broker, occupied the first floor, and FAY, WOOD & Co., paint dealers, occupied the second floor. The stock and buildings are fully covered by insurance. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Chamber of Commerce.

THE QUARANTINE REPORT ADOPTED.

The Regular Monthly Meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held yesterday at 1 o'clock, PELATIAH PERIT, the President, in the Chair.

Thirty gentlemen were elected members of the Chamber.

The Report of the Select Committee on the subject of Quarantine, with resolutions, was called up.

Mr. WETMORE read the resolutions.

Mr. BROWER said he was as much opposed as any one to unnecessary stringency in the Quarantine regulations of the port, but the first thing to be done was to obtain a place for Quarantine; until that was done the Chamber was discussing the end of the matter before they had made a beginning. He intimated that if it were found desirable, Ellis' or Bedloe's Islands might be secured from the Government for the purpose. He did not agree with the second resolution, that five days were sufficient to determine in every case whether a vessel was infectious. He cited the fact that business had heretofore been prostrated, and the City depopulated, by the appearance of yellow fever in an epidemic form, and it might occur again if the proper precautions were to be dispensed with. The result in such a case would be that the people would demand a more rigid Quarantine than we had ever had before. The interests of trade, the protection of the public health, and every other consideration, admonished us not to go too far, or adopt too radical changes until experience had demonstrated that they were safe.

Mr. BARROW called for the reading of the resolutions again.

Mr. WETMORE prefaced a second reading by some remarks in reply to Mr. BROWER, insisting that the latter gentleman had misapprehended their meaning.

Mr. TILESTON said the Committee had compared the Quarantine laws of New-York with those of all the other seaports of the United States. In case two vessels left Havana on the same day, during the prevalence of yellow fever there, one bound for New-York and the other for Boston, the one for Boston would, on arrival, be detained twenty-four or forty eight hours, and then be allowed to proceed to the city and discharge. She would do that, take in her cargo and sail on her return, while the vessel at New-York would still be detained at Quarantine.

After some further debate, the question was taken on the adoption of the report, and carried. The following are the resolutions as submitted by the Committee:

I. Resolved, As the sense of the Chamber of Commerce that the Quarantine Regulations of this port, so far as they concern the preservation of health and life, may safely be modified; and that so far as the interests of commerce are involved, ought to be modified and amended in the following particulars, viz:

1. To provide for the free egress of passengers and crews from vessels detained for examination, subject only to proper personal purification and changes of raiment.

2. To insure a more liberal construction of the laws in regard to the detention of vessels supposed to be infected, and the release of all not proven to be so within the period of five days.

3. A reduction in the charges of Quarantine in every branch of the system where they are now found to be exorbitant and burdensome, to a standard more just and equitable.

4. The selection, at the earliest period practicable, of a permanent location, within the waters of New-York, of a Quarantine station adapted to the public exigencies.

II. Resolved, That the Chamber will urge upon the Legislature of this State, at its approaching session, the passage of a law providing for the adoption of the beforementioned principles in the regulations and restrictions of the Quarantine system at this port.

III. Resolved, That the Chamber will memorialize the Congress of the United States for the establishment of a system of warehousing in connection with the Quarantine station of the port of New-York.

They then voted to print the report in pamphlet form, provided the expense did not exceed one hundred dollars.

A report favorable to WARD'S ocean telegraph signals was submitted by Captain MARSHALL, and after some debate, adopted and ordered to be placed on file.

The Chambers then adjourned.

BROOKLYN INTELLIGENCE.

THE RYERSON-STREET ARSON CASE.—The examination of this case, commenced before Justice MORRHOUSE, on Tuesday last, was concluded yesterday. MICHAEL O'NEIL and MARIA, his wife, were arrested on complaint of Fire-Marshal BELKNAP, for setting fire to the house occupied by them in Ryerson-street, near Myrtle-avenue. Quite a number of witnesses were examined in the case, and the result was O'NEIL was fully committed for trial. His wife was discharged from custody, as she could not legally be held—the law shielding her by the presumption that she was acting in the transaction under direction of her husband.

ALLEGED OUTRAGE.—The keeper of a porter-house, corner of Front and Dock streets, named DAVID M. CHAMBERLAIN, was arrested yesterday by Deputy Sheriff SNEDIKER, on a warrant in which he is charged with having committed a rape upon the person of a strawberry girl named ELIZA NEIS. The girl swears that on Saturday afternoon last the accused called her into his place for the ostensible purpose of purchasing berries of her. No sooner had she entered than he dragged her to a chamber, assisted by a man named BROWN, and accomplished his designs. The accused was examined before Justice CROMWELL yesterday noon, and was discharged.

DIED ALONE.—Yesterday, Inspector MCLANE, of the Eighth Precinct, found the dead body of a woman named RHODA CHRISTOFF, in a house on Nineteenth-street, near Third-avenue, Gowanus. It appears that the deceased was about 40 years old, and has been living alone for some time past. A few days ago she had a paralytic stroke, when a physician was called in, who prescribed for her, but did not call again. The neighbors knew nothing of the matter, and the woman died alone.

THE KNIFE.—A man named EDWARD POWERS was arrested yesterday by the Police of the Third Precinct for stabbing EDWARD MARTIN on Atlantic-street the night previous. The parties had a quarrel, when the accused getting the worst of it drew a knife, and inflicted a severe wound with it on the face of his opponent. POWERS was committed by Justice BLACHLEY for examination.

RESIGNED.—The Rev. Mr. HANSOM has been called to the pastoral care of the Reformed Dutch Church, Gravesend, vice the Rev. Mr. LADAGH, resigned on account of ill health.

Hungarians in Italy.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

SIR: Will you have the goodness to insert the following card in your valuable columns, and oblige,

Yours respectfully, A. ASBOTH.

I have been instructed by LOUIS KOSSUTH, "President of the National Hungarian Committee," in Italy, consisting of himself, General KLAPKA and Count LADISLAS TELEKI, to inform the sympathizers and friends of the Hungarian cause, and my fellow-countrymen in America, that a Hungarian Legion, under the auspices of the Sardinian Government, is organizing, and is already partly formed at Genoa, under Hungarian command, officered by Hungarians, bearing Hungarian colors and wearing the Hungarian uniform.

I am directed to advise my fellow-countrymen, desirous of joining their compatriots at Genoa, that they may look with confidence to their proximate departure, the time for which will be indicated when final arrangements shall have been completed. They are further requested to forward me their names, avocations and other particulars, for transmission to the National Committee, also their respective addresses for my own guidance.

To the friends and sympathizers of the Hungarian cause I beg leave to appeal, as directed, and request them to renew their generous exertions now; that after a period of seven years since KOSSUTH'S departure from the United States, that cause is not merely on the eve, but in the actual course of practical solution.

The sums at that time contributed have been long since expended entirely in preliminary objects essential to the furtherance of the cause; and now the moment of action having arrived, and the limited means of the Hungarian National Committee being currently absorbed by the local necessities in Europe, additional means are required for the Hungarians in the United States to facilitate their passage across the Atlantic to the field of action. It is hardly necessary to allude to the anxiety and mental torture of the Hungarians now in America on daily reflecting that they are prevented from joining their more fortunate fellow-exiles in Europe, who, near to the field of action, are co-operating in the solution of that national question for which we all made every sacrifice ten years ago. Bitter, indeed, must be the regret of these patriots if unable to realize that hope which has for ten years of exile been their daily thoughts—to strike one more blow for the liberty of their fatherland. Americans, whose struggle for independence is but of recent date, can fully appreciate such sentiments.

STEPHEN KNAPP, Esq., President of the Mechanics' Bank, No. 33 Wall-street, New-York, will kindly act on behalf of the Hungarian cause in this matter, and will receive contributions, which from time to time will be published, together with the names of the respective donors. A Committee of American citizens is now forming in New-York City, which will apply these contributions to the objects in view. All gifts of arms will be gladly received by the Committee, and shipped hence to Genoa for the Hungarian service. Any of the many improvements by which the genius of the people of the United States has asserted its supremacy in the arts of war as well as those of peace, will be highly valued as appropriate contributions, and will afford to their inventors a noble opportunity of being practically employed and tested in the field.

Wherever the friends of the Hungarian cause in any part of the [illegible] or operate with the Central Committee in New-York, I shall feel indebted to them for an early intimation of the fact, with the view of affording them all the information and assistance in my power.

FEARFUL MARINE DISASTERS.—The late gale on Lake Erie overset two very large vessels, which were scudding under bare poles, and nearly everybody on board was drowned. On one of the vessels three of the captain's children were drowned in the cabin. There were eleven lives lost in all. A few dollars expended with the De'ano Life Preserving Coat and Vest Company would have saved them all. Salesrooms at No. 256 Broadway.

THURSDAY, July 7—P. M.

There is a further improvement to-day in the Stock Market of ⅛@¾ ℔ cent. The demand is taking a wider range on the Share list, though showing itself strongest, as on yesterday, in New-York Central. The price advanced to 73¼ ℔ cent. without calling out a large amount of cash or contract stock. The Asia brings advice from London that the information from this side of the settlement of the Railway dispute about the 6th June, imparted more demand for the shares and bonds of New-York Central and for the mortgages of the Erie and Pennsylvania Central lines. Sales were made of New-York Central the day before the steamer sailed at 69 ℔ cent. sterling, equal to 75½ here. The shares of the Illinois Central, after a strong demand at 40@39 discount, closed at 40 discount, sellers. Sales of the United States 5s of 1874 are noted at 95 before the dividend, or 92½ ex coupon. It is stated that Mr. M. MORGAN had placed £100,000, or $500,000 of this stock with one of the leading Joint Stock Bankers in London, for account of RITTENHOUSE & Co., of Washington. In the Western Stocks to-day there is a further recovery in Michigan Guaranteed to 25½ ℔ cent., with considerable sales after the printed transactions of the Board. There is another apparently determined rise in Chicago and Rock Island shares, from 58⅜ yesterday morning to 60¼ this afternoon. Michigan Central rose 1 ℔ cent., and Reading to 41½ ℔ cent.; Galena, 62½@¾ ℔ cent.; Harlem and Hudson steady. In Railway Bonds, New-York Centrals and Erie Thirds were firm. In State Stocks, the bids for Missouri 5 ℔ cents. left off 82½@¼. Tennessees and Virginias firmer. United States 5 ℔ cents. brought 101½ ℔ cent. ex dividend. The general market left off firm. The rise is assisted in some measure, no doubt, by the state of the Money Market, which, without being decidedly cheaper in terms, manifests every way more confidence than in June among lenders, both at Bank and on the Street. At the same time the Banks give preference to the shortest date paper and to loans on short notice on strictly first-class collateral, most of the officers holding to the opinion that the early Fall demand for money will stiffen up the rates by the middle of September. A list of $95,000 indorsed bills, first-class, was placed to-day at 6¼ ℔ cent. ℔ annum, and some 60-day acceptances at 6 ℔ cent. Strictly prime 4@6 months' paper was done through the Discount Brokers at 7 ℔ cent. Demand loans came easy to the established Stock and Domestic Exchange firms at 6 ℔ cent., and in some cases, on State and United States collateral, 5½ ℔ cent. is accepted.

To-morrow, Friday, at 12½ o'clock, a large and choice catalogue of Stocks will be sold at the Merchants' Exchange, by Messrs. E. H. LUDLOW & Co., by order of Mr. JOHN Q. JONES and Mr. A. N. GIFFORD, Executors of the Millandon estate. The sale has been advertised for several days, and as it is to embrace United States New-York and Ohio State, and New-York and Brooklyn City Securities to a large amount, will, no doubt, attract a large company of buyers.

The Foreign Exchanges are quiet to-day. The mail on Saturday goes by the Bremen steamer, touching at Southampton. On London the rates are held very firm, at 60 days 110¼@110⅝, while short sight bills on London and on the Continent are made at relatively cheaper terms. The Asia brings quotations of 2¼@2½ ℔ cent. per annum on Discounts in London outside the Bank with a calculation that the payment of the July Dividend on the Public Securities would add to the general ease. The Bank continues its charge at 3 ℔ cent., but its Discount line is running down, in consequence of the out-door competition on lower terms, and the reserve of Notes Unemployed is now $57,335,000. The dealings in Consols were for the Account, as the transfers were closed for the Dividend. The fluctuations of one week were:
